

Durham E-Theses

---

Certamen Homeri et Hesiodi: Introduction, Critical Edition and Commentary

BASSINO, PAOLA

How to cite:

---

BASSINO, PAOLA (2013) Certamen Homeri et Hesiodi: Introduction, Critical Edition and Commentary, Durham theses, Durham University. Available at Durham E-Theses Online: <http://etheses.dur.ac.uk/8448/>

Use policy

---

The full-text may be used and/or reproduced, and given to third parties in any format or medium, without prior permission or charge, for personal research or study, educational, or not-for-profit purposes provided that:

- a full bibliographic reference is made to the original source
- a link is made to the metadata record in Durham E-Theses
- the full-text is not changed in any way

The full-text must not be sold in any format or medium without the formal permission of the copyright holders.

Please consult the full Durham E-Theses policy for further details.

Certamen Homeri et Hesiodi:
Introduction, Critical Edition and Commentary

Paola Bassino

Ustinov College

This thesis is submitted for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy

Department of Classics and Ancient History

University of Durham

2013

Abstract

Paola Bassino

Certamen Homeri et Hesiodi: Introduction, Critical Edition and Commentary.

This dissertation provides an up-to-date introduction to the Certamen Homeri et Hesiodi, a critical edition of the text, and the first commentary in English on it. The Certamen is an anonymous work composed around the second century AD. It gives an account of the lives of Homer and Hesiod and of their poetic contest by re-elaborating biographical anecdotes attested from the sixth century BC onwards. As a biographical work that draws on older texts and oral traditions which developed over hundreds of years, it yields unique insights into the reception of early Greek Epic in the course of classical antiquity.

This thesis begins with an introduction to the tradition of the contest between Homer and Hesiod that collects and discusses the extant ancient accounts of that story. It argues that all versions are equally authoritative in principle, for they testify to different acts of reception of the poets in different contexts. The thesis then offers an up-to-date analysis of the manuscript witnesses of the Certamen and of their contribution to our understanding of the textual tradition of this text, and shows that the ancient biographies of the poets form a corpus that is naturally open to variation. The Edition provides a text that accounts for such an open tradition. The line-by-line Commentary offers a systematic analysis of both general and specific issues related to the text: this is a necessary and urgent task, not least because the Certamen is a stratified text, bringing together traditions of very different provenance, which can only be assessed and interpreted through a process of close reading.

The ultimate aim of the thesis is to show how the story of the contest between Homer and Hesiod provides crucial insights into the processes of reception and canonisation of early hexameter epic from the archaic period to late antiquity.

Table of contents

Abstract.....	1
Statement of Copyright.....	3
Acknowledgements.....	3
Abbreviations of editions and works of reference.....	4
Preface.....	7
1. Introduction: the tradition of the contest between Homer and Hesiod.....	11
Hesiod.....	11
Plutarch.....	18
Dio Chrysostom, Oration on Kingship 2.7-12.....	28
Philostratus, Heroikos 43.7-10.....	31
Lucian, True Story 2.20-22.....	35
Themistius, Oration 30.348c-349a.....	38
Libanius, Defence of Socrates 65-66.....	41
Proclus, Life of Homer 6.....	43
John Tzetzes.....	46
Eustathius, Commentary on Homer's Iliad I 6.4-7.1 Van der Valk ( passim ).....	50
2. Textual tradition.....	53
Manuscript.....	54
Papyri.....	61
P.Petr. I 25 (1) (= P.Lond.Lit. 191).....	61
P.Mich. inv. 2754.....	70
P.Ath.Soc.Pap. inv. M2.....	80
P.Freib. 1.1 b (inv. 12).....	83
P.Duk. inv. 665 ( olim P.Duk. inv. MF75 6).....	85
3. Certamen Homeri et Hesiodi: Edition.....	90
Note.....	90
Sigla.....	90
Editions.....	90
Text.....	92
4. Commentary.....	118
Bibliography.....	231

Statement of Copyright

The copyright of this thesis rests with the author. No quotation from it should be published without the prior written consent and information derived from it should be acknowledged.

Acknowledgements

I would like to thank all the people and the institutions that supported me during these years at Durham. This experience would not have been possible without the financial support provided by the Department of Classics and Ancient History, the Faculty of Arts and Humanities and Ustinov College at Durham University.

My supervisor, Prof. Barbara Graziosi, has always been a fundamental point of reference for me. I applied for a PhD under her supervision because of her expertise on my field of research, but her understanding, patience, encouragement and trust in me, especially during hard times, have given me more than I could have ever expected from a supervisor. My second supervisor, Prof. Johannes Haubold, gave me precious comments on my work and saved me from many mistakes. Prof. Paola Ceccarelli too provided much good advice and support. It is a pleasure to acknowledge them here as two of the most influential academic figures during my postgraduate experience at Durham.

I have benefitted greatly from discussing my work with Giovanna Menci, who also shared with me the drafts of her editio princeps of P.Duk. inv. 665 while her work was in progress, and with the scholars who took part in the Kyklos teleconference (Harvard 2012) and the conference Conflict and Consensus in Early Hexameter Poetry (Durham 2012).

I have shared ideas and good times with many fellow graduate students and post-doctoral researchers of my Department. All of them have contributed to my work, either by discussing ancient epic with me, proofreading parts of this thesis, or just patiently lending their ears to me when I needed someone to talk to: Chiara Blanco, Lilah Grace Canevaro, Mirko Canevaro, Luke Evans, George Gazis, Nora Goldschmidt, Leonardo Gregoratti, Chiara Grigolin, Louise Hodgson, Nikoletta Manioti, Aglae Pizzone, Daniele Sberna, Erika Taretto, Talisa Tavella.

In Ustinov College many friends made me feel at home from the very first days: Zahra Afshar, Lara Bezzina, Sakib Bin Amin, Michele Fontefrancesco, Matteo Fossati, Alan May, Pauline Moret, Claudia Morgavi, Alice Panepinto, Rushil Ranchod, Azizullah Safi, Jay Wisayjorn, Nooshin Zolfaghari.

Finally, I wish to express my gratitude to all the people who supported me from Italy: my friends, especially Valentina Rizzo, for being always present although from a distance, and my family for their unconditional love. My nephews Riccardo and Alberto are the most important people in my life, and this thesis is dedicated to them.

Abbreviations of editions and works of reference

Classical authors are abbreviated as in LSJ, journals as in the Année Philologique. For the Lives of Homer I have used West's edition. All websites were last accessed on 13 June 2013.

BNJ = Brill's New Jacoby. Editor-in-chief I. Worthington. Leiden, 2007 –

BNP = Brill's New Pauly: encyclopaedia of the ancient world. Classical tradition. Eds. M. Landfester et al. Leiden, 2006-10.

CGFP = Comicorum Graecorum Fragmenta in Papyris reperta. Ed. C. Austin. Berlin, 1973.

D.-K. = Die Fragmente der Vorsokratiker. Eds. H. Diels and W. Kranz. Berlin, 1961 (10th ed.).

F (FGrHist) = Die Fragmente der Griechischen Historiker. Ed. F. Jacoby. Berlin, 1923 –

GDI = Sammlung der griechischen Dialekt-Inschriften. Ed. H. Collitz et al. Göttingen, 1884-1915.

ID = Inscriptiones Deli. Ed. F. Dürrbach. Berlin, 1929.

IG = Inscriptiones Graecae. Berlin, 1873 –

LDAB = Leuven Database of Ancient Books. Online resource:
<http://www.trismegistos.org/ldab/>

LfgrE = Lexicon des frühgriechischen Epos. Eds. B. Snell and H. Erbse. Göttingen, 1955-2010.

LIMC = Lexicon Iconographicum Mythologiae Classicae. Eds. L. Kahil et al. Zurich, 1981-97.

LSJ = A Greek-English Lexicon. Eds. H. G. Liddell, R. Scott, H. Jones et al. Oxford, 1996 (9th ed.).

M.-W. = Fragmenta Hesiodica. Eds. R. Merkelbach and M. L. West. Oxford, 1967.

MP<sup>3</sup> = Mertens-Pack 3 online Database, online resource:
<http://promethee.philo.ulg.ac.be/cedopal/indexanglais.htm>

PCG = Poetae Comici Graeci. Eds. R. Kassel and C. Austin. Berlin, 1983 –

S.-M. = Pindari Carmina Cum Fragmentis. Eds. B. Snell and H. Maehler. Leipzig, 1987.

SEG = Supplementum Epigraphicum Graecum. Eds. J. C. Gieben et al. Amsterdam, 1923 –

Suppl. Hell. = Supplementum Hellenisticum: Supplement. Ed. P. H. Lloyd-Jones. Berlin, 1983.

TGrF = Tragicorum Graecorum Fragmenta. Eds. R. Kannicht, S. Radt and B. Snell. Göttingen, 1971-2004.

---

Bernabé = Bernabé, A., ed. (1987). Poetae Epici Graeci: Testimonia et Fragmenta. Leipzig.

Boissonade = Boissonade, J. F. ed. (1851). Tzetzæ Allegoriae Iliadis. Paris.

Colonna = Colonna, A., ed. (1953). "I Prolegomeni ad Esiodo e la Vita Esiodea di G. Tzetzes." BPEC 2: 27-39.

Couvreur = Couvreur, P., ed. (1901). Hermeias von Alexandrien. In Platonis Phaedrum scholia. Paris.

Cribiore = Cribiore, R. (1996). Writing, Teachers, and Students in Graeco-Roman Egypt. Atlanta.

Davies = Davies, M., ed. (1988). Epicorum Graecorum Fragmenta. Göttingen.

De Lannoy = De Lannoy, L., ed. (1977). Flavii Philostrati Heroicus. Berlin.

Downey = Downey, G., et al., eds. (1971). Themistii Orationes quae supersunt, vol. 2. Leipzig.

Drachmann = Drachmann, A. B., ed. (1903). Scholia vetera in Pindari carmina recensuit A. B. Drachmann. Leipzig.

Foerster = Foerster, R., ed. (1903-27). Libanii Opera. Leipzig.

- Fowler = Fowler, R. L., ed. (2000). Early Greek Mythography. Oxford.
- Gostoli = Gostoli, A., ed. (2007). Margite. Pisa-Rome.
- Keaney = Keaney, J. J., ed. (1991). Harpocraton: Lexeis of the Ten Orators. Amsterdam.
- Kindstrand = Kindstrand, J. F., ed. (1979). Isaac Porphyrogenitus. Praefatio in Homerum. Uppsala.
- Macleod = Macleod, M. D., ed. (1972). Luciani Opera. Tomus I. Oxford.
- Matthews = Matthews, V. J., ed. (1996). Antimachus of Colophon: Text and Commentary. Leiden.
- Most = Most, G., ed. (2006). Hesiod. Theogony. Works and Days. Testimonia. Cambridge (MA).
- Paton = Paton, W. R., et al., eds. (1974). Plutarchi Moralia. Leipzig.
- Rose = Rose, V., ed. (1886). Aristotelis qui ferebantur librorum fragmenta. Leipzig.
- Sandbach = Sandbach, F. H., ed. (1969). Plutarch's Moralia XV. Fragments. Cambridge (MA).
- Schneider = Schneider, O. and H. Keil, eds. (1856). Nicandrea: Theriaca et Alexipharmaca. Leipzig.
- Wehrli = Wehrli, F., ed. (1967 (2nd ed.)). Die Schule des Aristoteles. Basel.
- West = West, M. L., ed. (1978). Hesiod: Works and Days. Oxford.
- Wyss = Wyss, B., ed. (1936). Antimachi Colophonii Reliquiae. Berlin.
- Van Der Valk = Van Der Valk, M., ed. (1971). Eustathii Archiepiscopi Thessalonicensis ad Homeri Iliadem Pertinentes. Volumen primum. Leiden.
- Voigt = Voigt, E. M., ed. (1963). Sappho Et Alcaeus. Fragmenta. Edidit Eva-Maria Voigt. Amsterdam.

Preface

Discipuli in fabulis de morte Hesiodi traditis discere possunt variis de eadem re traditis memoriis recte uti, quod philologi officium est non minus grave quam variis uti lectionibus.
Wilamowitz 1916: 2

The Certamen Homeri et Hesiodi is a text that has often attracted the interest of modern scholars. It deals with a biographical episode that was very famous in antiquity, the story of the contest of Homer and Hesiod, and it is the only extant work created precisely in order to tell this story. Furthermore it is the longest extant account of that story, and the most detailed witness of the verses that the poets allegedly exchanged on that occasion. However, it is also a problematic text. The Certamen has been transmitted anonymously, and the only clue in the text that can help us determine its chronology, a mention of the emperor Hadrian, is difficult to interpret and place in relation to the overall history of the text. Clearly, the text collects materials from different periods, and it is not always possible to identify its sources. Some of its contents, such as the story of Homer's death following his failure to solve a riddle, were already circulating in the sixth and fifth centuries BC. The story of the contest, and more specifically some of the verses that the two poets exchanged, were known to Alcidamas, a sophist of the fourth century BC, but the precise extent to which he influenced our extant text of the Certamen has been the object of much debate. Moreover, the Certamen is transmitted in its entirety in only one medieval manuscript, and some papyrus fragments transmit portions of a similar, but not identical, text.

In this dissertation I clarify the problems related to this text, through a systematic study that includes an introduction to the tradition of the story of the contest, an analysis of the manuscript witnesses, a critical edition of the text, and the first commentary in English on it. In doing so I take into account the peculiar nature and status of the biographical material in antiquity: I aim to show that biographical traditions form a corpus that is open to variations, both in terms of the contents of the biographical episodes and of the textual traditions of the individual texts.

My treatment of the story of the contest between Homer and Hesiod is informed by recent studies on the value of biographical material as evidence for the early reception of a poet's work. It has long been acknowledged that the ancient biographical accounts on the poets should not be considered as reliable historical sources to reconstruct their real lives. An approach such as that of Wilamowitz, who famously tried to produce a consistent and plausible biography of Homer out of conflicting claims transmitted in the ancient sources, was already criticized by Jacoby a few years later.<sup>1</sup> More recently, in the first edition of her book The Lives of Greek Poets in 1981, Lefkowitz argues that most of the biographical material is derived from statements included in the poets' own verses and that it can be therefore disregarded as popular fiction.<sup>2</sup> In an equally skeptical approach, Latacz titles the chapter of his 1991 book Homer: His Art and His Work on the figure of Homer 'The source situation: nothing authentic'.<sup>3</sup> More recently however, scholars have proposed other ways to approach these fictional texts. In the introduction of Inventing Homer, Graziosi suggests that early speculations about the author of the Homeric poems must ultimately derive from an encounter between the poems and the ancient <sup>1</sup> Wilamowitz 1916b: 397 suggested that the claims by Smyrna, Chios and Colophon could be put together to fashion a plausible biography for Homer. He could have been born in Smyrna, been active as a teacher in Colophon and then settled in Chios. Jacoby 1933 on the other hand suggested that those are local and independent claims. More generally, nineteenth – early twentieth century scholars who doubted the historical value of the ancient biographical material are Lehrs 1875 and Leo 1901.

---

<sup>2</sup> Lefkowitz 1981: vii-xi.

<sup>3</sup> Latacz 1996: 23-30.

audiences.<sup>4</sup> This material, therefore, becomes important not as a source for reconstructing a poet's real life, but as evidence for the reception of his works. Along similar lines, Hanink proposes to read Euripides' biographies by considering the cultural and political forces within which the active imagination of biographers operated.<sup>5</sup> Beecroft likewise claims that biographical anecdotes offer 'implied poetics'.<sup>6</sup> In the second edition of her book, Lefkowitz acknowledges and, to an extent, adopts these new perspectives on biographical material.<sup>7</sup> The Introduction of this thesis argues that the ancient accounts of the story of the contest between Homer and Hesiod testify to different acts of reception of the poets in different contexts and were re-shaped, indeed re-created, accordingly.

Biographical texts were subjected to variations and modification in terms of their textual transmission too. Biographies, as West notes, are one of the categories of texts for which it is impossible to draw standard stemmata and which were subject to embellishments, alterations and revisions, so that the high number of respectable-looking variants does not allow us to construct an archetype.<sup>8</sup> It seems that we rather need a looser model, a net of criss-crossing influences among these texts. Reconstructing the Ur-text of a Life is often impossible because of the very high number of variant readings, corruptions and interpolations which affect both single words and entire sections of the

---

<sup>4</sup> Graziosi 2002: 2-3.

<sup>5</sup> Hanink 2008. See esp. p. 132.

<sup>6</sup> Beecroft 2010. See esp. pp. 2 and 19.

<sup>7</sup> See e.g. Lefkowitz 2012: 2: 'biographers could not tell their readers who Homer really was, but they could offer a portrait of the kind of person who might have written the Odyssey', and therefore biographies 'can provide clues to what ancient writers and audiences supposed the creative process to be, and can give us an impression of the kinds of poetry and subject matter that ancient people admired at different times and places'.

<sup>8</sup> West 1973: 16-17.

text.<sup>9</sup> The number of variants which we find in the manuscripts of the Lives is arguably due to the fact that these stories were considered essentially fictional and therefore fluid from the beginning. There was no strong need, in antiquity, to preserve the original because there never was an original Life of Homer, or an original Life of Hesiod, but just a series of different, interconnected versions. Those who wrote, excerpted and transmitted these early versions did not feel bound to transmit them faithfully: they rather selected material that could then be further mixed and modified, in order to recreate the figure of the author. This explains why it is often impossible to find the correct or original version of a story about Homer or Hesiod; or even the correct or original reading of a version of such a story. Our aim should rather be to understand the value of such variants as evidence for the innate flexibility of literary reception. Through my analysis of the text, I ultimately aim to show that the Certamen is the product of a conscious and purposeful adaptation of its sources, and deals with material that is itself fluid and suitable for alterations.

---

<sup>9</sup> It follows that a model such as that proposed by Allen 1924: 31-3 for the Lives of Homer, still considered valid by Esposito Vulgo Gigante 1996: 63, is in fact unacceptable. Allen suggested that all the extant Lives derive from a lost common source, of which the Anon. Vit. Hom. 1 preserves the fullest memory; the other texts are divided in two branches deriving from the Anon. Vit. Hom. 1. The situation seems to be similar for other corpora of ancient biographies, such as the Vidas of the Provençal troubadours: Boutière and Schutz in their edition of the Vidas (1950 and 1964) acknowledge that many of those texts are transmitted in different versions and claim that it is not possible to draw a stemma for them. Avalle 1960 in his edition of the Vida of Peire Vidal recognizes the existence of different branches of manuscripts but, again, does not create a stemma.

1. Introduction: the tradition of the contest between Homer and Hesiod.

This section analyses the extant versions of the story of the poetic contest of Homer and Hesiod other than the Certamen Homeri et Hesiodi. It treats them in chronological order and investigates their relationship to the Certamen. The tradition originated from the passage from Works and Days (650-9, quoted below) in which Hesiod proclaims his victory in a poetic contest. This chapter shows that later authors never contradicted the features of the episode as told by Hesiod, but created and adapted all other details to their own needs. As well as the inherent flexibility of the contest tradition – which is reflected in the textual fluidity and (at times) textual uncertainty of the sources discussed – this chapter highlights the contexts in which the story of the contest between Homer and Hesiod appeared. Broadly speaking, it appears in exegetical and biographical texts – commentaries on the Works and Days, Lives of Homer and Hesiod – but also, and importantly, in rhetorical works. Clearly, the competition between Homer and Hesiod was treated as a useful exemplum, which could be used in support of several different points and positions, and was therefore adapted to fit the particular purpose to which it was put. The popularity of the contest story in rhetorical works helps to explain the transmission of the Certamen, which survives for us in a manuscript that contains mainly rhetorical material.

Hesiod.

The story of the poetic contest between Homer and Hesiod originated from the passage from Works and Days (650-9) in which Hesiod proclaims his victory in a poetic contest:

650 οὐ γάρ ποτ' ἐν νηὶ γ' ἐπέπλων εὐρέα πόντον, εἰ μὴ ἐς Εὐβοίαν ἐξ Αὐλίδος, ἧ ποτ' Ἀχαιοὶ μείναντες χειμῶνα πολὺν σὺν λαὸν ἄγειραν Ἑλλάδος ἐξ ἱερῆς Τροίην ἐς καλλιγύναικα.
ἐνθα δ' ἐγὼν ἐπ' ἄεθλα δαΐφρονος Ἀμφιδάμαντος

655 Χαλκίδα τ' εἰς ἐπέρησα· τὰ δὲ προπεφραδμένα πολλά ἄθλ' ἔθεσαν παῖδες μεγαλήτορος· ἔνθά μὲ φημι ὔμνω νικήσαντα φέρειν τρίποδ' ὠτώνετα.
τὸν μὲν ἐγὼ Μούσης Ἑλικωνιάδεσσ' ἀνέθηκα ἐνθά με τὸ πρῶτον λιγυρῆς ἐπέβησαν ἀοιδῆς. (Ed. West)

As has often been pointed out, this is a programmatic passage: Hesiod does not (only) aim at giving instructions on sailing, of which, as he admits, he does not have much experience. He is establishing his credentials as a didactic poet against heroic epic.<sup>10</sup> For this reason, although Hesiod does not explicitly mention his rival in the contest, Homer's name was readily supplied. Indeed, it even penetrated the textual tradition of Works and Days: a scholium to line 657 gives as a variant a line that was also part of the epigram allegedly inscribed on the tripod Hesiod won:

ὔμνω νικήσαντ' ἐν Χαλκίδι θεῖον Ὅμηρον.<sup>11</sup>

We do not know how widely attested this variant was but, as Nagy claims, there is no proof for the conventional explanation that this variant verse is a mere interpolation from the epigram: as a reported variant it may have reflected a genuine traditional alternative that has been gradually ousted in the course of a poem's crystallization into a fixed text.<sup>12</sup> This shows that the interaction and the relationship between the Hesiodic passage and the contest story are very strong: if the verses from Works and Days gave the input for the creation of the contest story, in turn the contest story influenced and penetrated the textual <sup>12</sup> Nagy 1990: 78. A supporter of the 'interpolation' theory is West 1978: 321. Cf. for discussion also Skiadas 1965: 10-13 and Debiasi 2001: 19-20.

---

<sup>10</sup> Nagy 1982: 66, Rosen 1990 and 1997: 478-9, Graziosi 2002: 170. These studies point out that, by showing his awareness of the right time for sailing, Hesiod differentiates himself from the Homeric heroes, who had to wait before sailing from Aulis to Troy; furthermore, the formulae with the epic epithets καλλιγύναιξ and ἱερή are reversed compared to the Homeric poems.

<sup>11</sup> The epigram is transmitted by Cert. 213-4, AP 7.53, Procl. Vit. Hom. 6, D. Chr. Or. 2.11, P.Freib. 1.1b.

tradition of Works and Days. This interaction is also shown by the fact that the authors who wanted to deny that the contest happened also denied the Hesiodic authorship of Op. 650-9 and proposed to athetise that passage.<sup>13</sup>

Hesiod's victory, therefore, is proclaimed by the poet himself in his work, and for this reason is a non-negotiable aspect of the story. But a fundamental role in sealing the verdict was played also by the material reception of the Hesiodic passage. A tripod bearing the epigram of Hesiod's victory was displayed in antiquity in the place where Hesiod himself (Op. 657-8) claims to have dedicated it, on Mt Helicon. It was visible in Pausanias' times (Paus. 9.31.3):

ἐν δὲ τῷ Ἑλικῶνι καὶ ἄλλοι τρίποδες κεῖνται καὶ ἀρχαιότατος, ὃν ἐν Χαλκίδι λαβεῖν τῇ ἐπ' Εὐρίπῳ λέγουσιν Ἡσίοδον νικήσαντα ὥδῃ. περιοικοῦσι δὲ καὶ ἄνδρες τὸ ἄλσος, καὶ ἑορτὴν τε ἐνταῦθα οἱ Θεσπιεῖς καὶ ἀγῶνα ἄγουσι Μουσεῖα.

The tripod of Hesiod's victory against Homer was the material evidence of Hesiod's greatness, and 'guarantees the immortal presence of Hesiod in the Valley of the Muses'.<sup>14</sup> Its presence played an important role in the celebration of Hesiod's poetry on Helicon – a celebration that was mainly made in relation to Homer, as is confirmed by the absence of the statue of Homer from the statuary in the sanctuary of the Muses on Helicon.<sup>15</sup> Because of its importance, most writers were aware that the treatment of the story involved almost by necessity a discussion of the tripod.

According to Varro, for example, the tripod proves that the two poets

---

<sup>13</sup> See sections on Plutarch, Proclus and Tzetzes in this chapter (pp. 18-28 and 44-51).

<sup>14</sup> Manieri 2009: 316. The presence of Hesiod on the Mt Helicon is connected to the festival of the Mouseia, and arguably to their very institution: see Vox 1980: 321, Lamberton 1988, Calame 1996, Manieri 2009: 315-18 and 353.

<sup>15</sup> Hunter 2006: 19 notes that thanks to the tripod and to the absence of a statue of Homer the grove on Helicon is 'not just explicitly Hesiod's mountain, but also, importantly, not Homer's'.

were contemporaries and competed against each other.<sup>16</sup> Dio Chrysostom (Or. 2.11, see pp. 28-31) makes a similar use of the tripod and the epigram. Plutarch, on the other hand, in the scholium to Op. 650-9 (see p. 26) proposes the athetesis of the Hesiodic passage on the contest on the ground that the story is ‘silly stuff’, and probably believed that the passage was inserted at a later time precisely in order to justify the presence of the tripod on Mt Helicon – in turn a forgery created to give ancient roots to the Mouseia.<sup>17</sup>

Another fixed feature of the tradition that is inspired by the Hesiodic passage is the location of the contest: Chalcis. This leads to the discussion of another passage traditionally attributed to Hesiod, [Hes.] fr. 357 M.-W., where Homer and Hesiod are depicted together in the act of singing a hymn to Apollo at Delos.<sup>18</sup>

ἐν Δήλῳ τότε πρῶτον ἐγὼ καὶ Ὅμηρος ἀοιδοί μέλομεν, ἐν νεαροῖς ὕμνοις ῥάψαντες ἀοιδὴν, Φοῖβον Ἀπόλλωνα χρυσάορον ὃν τέκε Λητώ.

Some modern scholars have seen the meeting of the two poets on Delos as connected to that at Chalcis. West suggests that this fragment comes from a poem that told the story of the first (πρῶτον) meeting between the two poets in which Homer won, followed by the Chalcidean episode which would be Hesiod’s revenge. According to West, such a work could not have existed before

---

<sup>16</sup> Gell. Noctes Atticae 3.11: M. Autem Varro in primo de Imaginibus .. dicit... non esse dubium quin aliquo tempore eodem vixerint, idque ex epigrammate ostendi, quod in tripode scriptum est, qui in monte Helicone ab Hesiodo positur traditur.

<sup>17</sup> Lamberton 1988: 503.

<sup>18</sup> This pseudo-Hesiodic fragment derives from a scholium to Pindar’s Nemean 2.1 (3.31.7 Drachmann). The scholiast reports Philochorus’ opinion on the etymology of the word rhapsode, which he connects to ῥάπτειν τὴν ᾠδὴν: ‘to stitch the song’ (cf. 328 F 212). The fragment is quoted in support of it. This scholium contains information that is vital to our knowledge of ancient performative practices, and touches on matters that are relevant to the Certamen too (e.g. the Homeridae, Kynaithos and the Hymn to Apollo). It therefore features at several points of my commentary: see Cert. 13-15n., 56n. and 317n.

Alcidamas, or he would have set his story on Delos rather than at Chalcis because, at Works and Days 650-9, Homer is not mentioned, whereas in this fragment he is.<sup>19</sup> This argument seems to me unconvincing because the mere existence of this fragment does not prove its ability to become more influential than the Works and Days in determining the location of the contest between Homer and Hesiod for Alcidamas. Kivilo (who unlike West situates the origins of the Delian fragment before Alcidamas) and Nagy believe Delos to be an alternative location for the episode of the contest between Homer and Hesiod that took place at Chalcis.<sup>20</sup> However, the Works and Days is the canonical source of the story and locating the contest on the island of Delos would contradict two of the details given by Hesiod: that the contest took place at Chalcis (Op. 655) and that the poet never sailed the sea except from Aulis to Chalcis (Op. 650-1). The tone of Hesiod's words in the fragment, the apparent collaboration between the two bards in order to create one new song, the mention of Apollo – aspects which are completely absent from the verses about Chalcis – are further reasons to look for the origins and the meaning of fr. 357 M.-W. in other circumstances, independent from the Chalcidean episode.

A plausible and now widely accepted hypothesis was proposed by Burkert in 1979, and at the same time developed independently by Janko, who published it three years later.<sup>21</sup> These scholars connect our fragment to a festival organised by Polycrates, tyrant of Samos, in 523-2 BC: this festival was held on Delos and was a joint celebration of Apollo of Delos and Apollo of Delphi. The occasion may also have seen the first joint performance of the two parts of the

---

<sup>19</sup> West 1967: 440.

<sup>20</sup> Kivilo 2000: 3 and 2010: 21, Nagy 2010: 70. Based on a doubtful passage of the Certamen (55n.), they also propose Aulis as a third possible location – although Kivilo 2010: 19 seems to be open to the possibility, accepted in this commentary, that Aulis is mentioned as the place from which the two poets sailed to Chalcis.

<sup>21</sup> Burkert 1979: 59-60, Janko 1982: 113.

Hymn to Apollo, the Delian and the Pythian. Fr. 357 M.-W. worked therefore as an attempt to give ancient and authoritative roots to this festival, by attributing the proto-performance of the joint parts of the Hymn to Homer and Hesiod respectively.<sup>22</sup> If this suggestion is correct, it also accounts for the emphasis on the cooperation between the two bards that seems to emerge from the verses, and that makes the episode look quite different from the story told in the Certamen.<sup>23</sup>

Because one of the versions of the proto-performance of the Hymn to Apollo is told in the Certamen, it is interesting to proceed with a comparison between the witness given by our fragment and the others that have reached us. Another famous story about Homer (this time Homer alone) performing this Hymn is told by Thucydides. At 3.104, the historian gives an account of the purification of Delos carried out by the Athenians in 426 BC, the first purification of the island after Pisistratus' times. He remarks that the action taken by his fellow citizens in 426 BC also included the revival of the festival of the Delia, which, he recalls, in ancient times saw Homer himself reciting the Hymn to Apollo.

It seems that we have here two different versions of the story, each of which emphasises different issues. These can be explained, at least in part, as

---

<sup>22</sup> For the Delian part as 'Homeric' and the Pythian as 'Hesiodic' see e.g. Janko 1982: 113.

<sup>23</sup> This has long been noted too: Graziosi 2002: 182 notes that in the fragment the two poets sing a hymn to a god, and that when they are presented together as religious experts the emphasis is on their cooperation rather than on their rivalry; Collins 2004: 181 stresses that the two are said to produce one song (ἀοιδήν). However, as noted by Koning 2010: 246 n. 27 who criticises Heldmann 1982: 16-17, the emphasis on their cooperation does not exclude that the context in which the performance was set was a competitive one. The verses pronounced by each poet in the Certamen, which are poetic entities of their own, assume additional nuances and new meanings when seen in response to one another (see most remarkably the exchanges at 107-37 and the relations between the two 'finest passages' at 180-204n.), thus creating in turn new poetic unities.

responses to the different political contexts in which the anecdotes were told. Moreover, some elements of the Thucydidean version seem to suggest that the two traditions were engaging and competing with each other. Because the story told in [Hes.] fr. 357 M.-W. probably has its origins in a festival in honour of Apollo of both Delos and Delphi, which hosted the joint performance of the Delian and Pythian parts of the Hymn, the presence of Hesiod in the anecdote seems to have been determined by the Delphic element. The Thucydidean version, by contrast, focuses only on the Delian elements: the Athenians revived the festival called Delia; only Homer is mentioned; verses from the Delian part and strictly connected to the figure of Homer are quoted (esp. 165-72). All this underlines the Athenian connection with Delos, with all the political and symbolic meaning that it had for the Athenian empire.<sup>24</sup> The relationship between Athens and Delphi were difficult at the time of the Peloponnesian War because of the pro-Spartan sympathies of the oracle.<sup>25</sup> It is perhaps not too surprising that Thucydides fails to refer to the Delphic/Hesiodic part of the Hymn.<sup>26</sup> The version given by the Certamen at 315-21 is similar to that given by Thucydides, although not all details are the same. In both accounts, however, <sup>24</sup> Hornblower 1991: 142 and 520-1 remarks that Delos was the birthplace of Apollo, the father of Ion, which makes the island a particularly interesting site for Athens that proposed herself as the mother-state for the Ionian cities. Delos was also chosen as site of the League treasury before it was moved to Athens.

---

<sup>25</sup> Hornblower 1991: 521-2.

<sup>26</sup> Interestingly, then, an element in the Thucydidean account seems to show that there was also a certain degree of awareness of and engagement among these different traditions: on the occasion of the festival to which fr. 357 M.-W. is connected, Polycrates spectacularly dedicated the island of Rheneia to Apollo by bounding it with a chain to Delos. Thucydides, before mentioning the Athenians' own revival of the Delian festival in 426 BC, relates that the Athenians during the purification of Delos brought the corpses to Rheneia, and then remarks that the two islands are so close to each other that Polycrates could bind Rheneia to Delos with a chain. This minimizes the role of an event that was surely important to the Polycratean propaganda.

Homer emerges as a Panionian poet. The Certamen seems to take inspiration from the tradition testified by Thucydides, according to which the process of Panhellenisation of Homer is connected to the image of the blind bard from Chios presented in the Hymn to Apollo: this was the image of the poet accepted and promoted by the Athenians, and thus became predominant.<sup>27</sup>

In conclusion, fr. 357 M.-W. has no relation with the Chalcidean contest: the mention of Homer and Hesiod performing together on a different occasion may have been inspired, or supported, by the Chalcidean tradition, but it does not represent an alternative version of it.

Plutarch.

Plutarch (first-second century AD) refers to the story of the contest between Homer and Hesiod in three passages: Dinner of the Seven Sages 153f-154a; Table Talk 674f-675a; Commentary on Hesiod's Works and Days fr. 84 Sandbach.

The story as told in the Dinner, with which this discussion starts, contains many features that make it unique. The one that has attracted the greatest scholarly attention is the textually disputed mention of Lesches. The following analysis justifies the presence of Lesches as a competitor, rather than – as often suggested – the narrator or creator of the story. In the Dinner of the Seven Sages 153f-154a, Plutarch tells the story of a dinner hosted by Periander and attended by the Sages and others. At the point of the text where mention of the contest occurs, the king of the Egyptians, Amasis, enlists the help of Bias, one of the Sages, to solve a riddle proposed by the king of the Ethiopians: how to drink up the ocean. Bias offers a suitable solution for the challenge (blocking the rivers flowing into the ocean), and Chilon suggests that Amasis should learn from Bias how to improve his government instead of how to play these silly games. After the Sages have engaged in political discussions and exchanged some riddles in turn, Cleodorus announces that this game, too, is a waste of time. At this point, Periander refers to the story of the famous poetic contest in which Hesiod gained victory and a tripod.

---

<sup>27</sup> See also Cert. 315-21n.

Below is the text in the Teubner edition:<sup>28</sup>

Ἀκούομεν γὰρ ὅτι καὶ πρὸς τὰς Ἀμφιδάμαντος ταφὰς εἰς Χαλκίδα τῶν τότε σοφῶν οἱ δοκιμώτατοι [ποιηταὶ] συνῆλθον· ἦν δ' ὁ Ἀμφιδάμας ἀνὴρ πολεμικός, καὶ πολλὰ πράγματα παρασχὼν Ἑρετριεῦσιν ἐν ταῖς περὶ Ληλάντου μάχαις ἔπεσεν. ἐπεὶ δὲ τὰ παρεσκευασμένα τοῖς ποιηταῖς ἔπη χαλεπὴν καὶ δύσκολον ἐποίει τὴν κρίσιν διὰ τὸ ἐφάμιλλον, ἥ τε δόξα τῶν ἀγωνιστῶν [Ὀμήρου καὶ Ἡσιόδου] πολλὴν ἀπορίαν μετ' αἰδοῦς τοῖς κρίνουσι παρεῖχεν, ἐτράποντο πρὸς τοιαύτας ἐρωτήσεις, καὶ προύβαλε μὲν, ὥς φασι, Λέσχης,

Μοῦσά μοι ἔννεπε κεῖνα, τὰ μήτ' ἐγένοντο πάροιθε
μήτ' ἔσται μετόπισθεν, ἀπεκρίνατο δ' Ἡσιόδος ἐκ τοῦ παρατυχόντος

ἀλλ' ὅταν ἀμφὶ Διὸς τύμβῳ καναχήποδες ἵπποι ἄρματα συντρίψωσιν ἐπειγόμενοι περὶ νίκης.

καὶ διὰ τοῦτο λέγεται μάλιστα θαυμασθεὶς τοῦ τρίποδος τυχεῖν.

Here Lesches is presented as one of the contestants: he proposes a riddle that Hesiod solves, thus winning the contest. But the presence of Lesches, indeed that of any other poet than Homer and Hesiod, is not attested elsewhere in the tradition of the contest, and scholars have therefore proceeded to expel Lesches from it. Following one of the variants attested in the manuscript tradition, Allen published a text in which Lesches is not a competitor, but the narrator of the story.<sup>29</sup> According to Allen, Lesches might have written about <sup>28</sup> Paton, Wegehaupt and Pohlenz 1974. This text is essentially the same as that in Wilamowitz 1916, in the Belles Lettres edition of Plutarch by Defradas, Hani and Klaerr 1985 and in Most 2006. All the quotations from Plutarch are from the Teubner edition.

<sup>29</sup> Allen 1912: 136, 218 and 1924: 25. The text is accepted in the Loeb edition of Plutarch by Babbitt 1928. I copy here for the sake of clarity the apparatus as it appears in the Teubner edition:

15 secl. Larsen      19 secl. Wil.      21 προύβαλε (–βαλλε P) PQB προυβάλομεν v προυβάλλομεν O    φασι QhJ nwB φησί O.

Some of the scholars who have dealt with the manuscript tradition of this passage have misunderstood it because of the presence of an ambiguous siglum in the apparatus. Kirk 1950: 150 n. 1 claims that O is alone in transmitting the reading φησί, and he is followed by West the contest story either in the Little Iliad, or in a poem that Lesches wrote about Homer's life. Allen's text, recently defended by O' Sullivan, Kivilo and Koning, runs: καὶ προέβαλ' ὁ μὲν, ὥς φησι Λέσχης ('and he (scil. Homer), as Lesches asserts, proposed the following').<sup>30</sup> This reading does not seem plausible to me. To begin with, it is improbable that a poet closely associated with Homer, such as Lesches, would have told a story in which Hesiod defeated Homer. The poems attributed to Lesches, such as the Little Iliad, are set in the heroic age, in which the story of the contest does not belong.<sup>31</sup> More fundamentally, the very attempt to discover the original author of such a story seems misguided, since most of the biographical episodes related to the lives of the archaic poets circulated anonymously at an early stage.

It has been argued in defence of Allen's reading that we have no evidence for a contest of singers with three or more contestants competing at the same time.<sup>32</sup> But the last part of Periander's introductory sentence does, indeed, seem 1967: 439 and Kivilo 2000: 4 and 2010: 23. In fact, the siglum present in this section of the apparatus, O (Greek letter omicron), stands for codices omnes praeter citatos, while it is O (Latin alphabet) that represents a manuscript, the Ambr. 528 s. (cf. conspectus siglorum at p. XLVI in the Teubner edition), which is not mentioned here. It follows that the manuscripts QhJ nwB give the reading φασι; all the others (except for those mentioned and including O) give φησί.

---

<sup>30</sup> O' Sullivan 1992: 80-1, Kivilo 2000 and 2010:23-4 (cf. also Kivilo 2010b: 90) and Koning 2010: 260 n. 83.

<sup>31</sup> In this respect it is useful to remark, with West 1967: 439, that 'we know of a considerable number of early hexameter poems that were current in antiquity, and not one of them was about post-Dark Age personalities. 'Biographical' poetry did not exist, to the best of our knowledge'. Kivilo's attempts to 'trace an archaic biographical poem here' (2010: 24 n. 72) do not seem convincing. To argue for an early date for the origins of the story of the contest between Homer and Hesiod, we do not necessarily need a connection with Lesches or any other specific name. Another, more convincing attempt to trace the earliest developments of the legend in archaic times is in Debiasi 2012, according to whom the story originated in connection to the Lelantine war.

<sup>32</sup> Kivilo 2010: 23.

to imply a contest among more than two participants. Furthermore, other witnesses of the story such as the Certamen and even Hesiod's Works and Days (650–9) seem to set no limit on the number of competitors who took part in the event as a whole. Even if such a version of the contest did not exist before Plutarch, he may, in any case, have invented further competitors to suit his own rhetorical purposes. The mention of the competition between the poets occurs in the context of advice given to kings. In the Dinner, Plutarch suggests a connection between riddle solving and the ability to rule well, two talents which have σοφία in common. The Sages, who can solve riddles, are also engaged in enlightened political discussions, and a female character in the work, Cleobulina, who improved the government of her father, is also famous for her riddles. Amasis, by contrast, does not excel in either ability. It stands to reason that, when telling of one of the most famous competitions in riddle solving, Plutarch wants to draw as close a parallel as possible between the σοφοί who took part in that competition and the σοφοί at his banquet, and that may well be why he suggests, by mentioning Lesches, that more than two wise poets competed in the contest. Lesches fits well as an extra competitor for several reasons: he was an epic poet and even shared with Homer the attribution of the Little Iliad.<sup>33</sup> But that work could not compete with the real Iliad in terms of perceived poetic quality; and Lesches was nowhere near as famous as Homer.<sup>34</sup> Unlike the Certamen, where Hesiod defeats Homer solely on the basis of Panedes' verdict, here the poetic skills of Hesiod do not leave room for disagreement over his victory: Plutarch can thus safely use this episode to make his point about the importance of riddle solving. Lesches was also known to have participated in another poetic contest, against Arctinus, and that may have been at the back of Plutarch's mind when he included him in this story.<sup>35</sup>

---

<sup>33</sup> Collection of testimonia in Davies 1988: 49–52.

<sup>34</sup> As Graziosi 2002: 172 suggests, he is 'the perfect substitute in that he is traditionally very close to Homer, but less authoritative'. That does not necessarily contradict the claim that at the contest τῶν τότε σοφῶν οἱ δοκιμώτατοι ποιηταὶ συνῆλθον (pace Koning 2010: 260 n. 85). Important, here, is the fact that the Dinner of the Seven Sages mentions several obscure names of sages and other guests: clearly Plutarch is displaying his erudition by revealing surprising and generally unknown elements both of the Seven Sages traditions and of the poetic contest tradition. Comparing his version with other accounts of the Seven Sages (Pl. Prt. 343a; D.L. 1.40; Stob. 3.1.172) we find, then, differences in the names of the Sages and in the place of their

A related textual problem in this passage is posed by the words τῶν ἀγωνιστῶν Ὁμήρου καὶ Ἡσιόδου. These have almost unanimously been considered to contradict the presence of Lesches at the contest: some scholars use them as evidence for the fact that Plutarch refers to a contest between Homer and Hesiod only.<sup>36</sup> Others solve this apparent problem by athetizing Ὁμήρου καὶ Ἡσιόδου, and suggesting that it was a marginal gloss that made it into the text at an early stage of transmission.<sup>37</sup> This latter suggestion seems meeting. As in the account of the poetic contest between Homer and Hesiod, the variations often have a clear rationale.

---

<sup>35</sup> Phaenias fr. 33 Wehrli: ναὶ μὴν καὶ Τέρπανδρον ἀρχαίζουσιν τινες· Ἑλλάνικος γοῦν (4 F 85b) τοῦτον ἱστορεῖ κατὰ Μίδα γεγονέναι, Φανίας δὲ πρὸ Τερπάνδρου τιθεὶς Λέσχην τὸν Λέσβιον Ἀρχιλόχου νεώτερον φέρει τὸν Τέρπανδρον, διημιλλῆσθαι δὲ τὸν Λέσχην Ἀρκτίνῳ καὶ νενικηκέναι. Other tentative explanations have been offered: Milne 1924: 57 suggests that Lesches' name was substitute for Homer's in the Hellenistic period or later because of the chronological problem of making Homer and Hesiod contemporaries; Richardson 1981: 2 argues that Plutarch's account may reflect an earlier version of the story; Erbse 1996: 313-14 suggests emending the name of Lesches to Panedes. Among the attempts to account for the role of Lesches as the narrator of the story in the Plutarchean passage, Fowler's remarks (apud Kivilo 2010: 23 n. 71) seem the most reasonable: he claims that 'Plutarch may not necessarily have quoted first hand and there could be false inference behind his reference'. That is, even if Plutarch was indeed presenting Lesches as a narrator, he could have been wrong and this passage alone cannot prove Allen's and Kivilo's theory of Lesches as the creator of the contest story.

<sup>36</sup> Koning 2010: 260 n. 84 and Kivilo 2000: 4 and 2010: 23.

<sup>37</sup> The athetesis was first proposed by Wilamowitz 1879: 161. See also Wilamowitz 1916: 55 and 1916b: 405. It was later accepted in the Teubner and Belles Lettres editions and by West 1967:

plausible, but the alleged gloss is attested in all our manuscripts, so we should be careful about suggesting an athetesis.<sup>38</sup> In fact, it is possible to make sense of the text as it stands: it says that the quality of Homer's and Hesiod's performance made it difficult for the judges to issue a verdict; hence they asked for the competition to go on and Hesiod, able to solve Lesches' riddle, was eventually awarded the victory. The fact that Hesiod replies ἐκ τοῦ παρατυχόντος may also mean that Hesiod was the first to reply to a riddle proposed to all the contestants. Lesches poses a riddle, and Hesiod solves it first – thus winning the competition.

Another explanation for the presence of Lesches that has gathered some consensus among modern scholars, and deserves attention here, is West's. He argues that the name Λέσχης replaced Ὅμηρος in the text: Homer would be the contestant who actually proposes the challenge, but a reader may have been reminded of Lesches by the verses of the question, and his name written in the margin of a copy of Plutarch's text would then have penetrated the text.<sup>39</sup> If the presupposition of West's statement is right, i.e. that these verses were in antiquity (sometimes) attributed to Lesches, Plutarch, too, must have been aware of this connection: there is no need to postulate that he gave Homer verses traditionally attributed to another poet, when we consider that the tradition offered an alternative version for the question, which Plutarch may well have known.<sup>40</sup> It seems to me more probable that Lesches was present in 439.

---

<sup>38</sup> However, from my remark it does not follow that the presence of these words in all the manuscript guarantees their genuineness. The fact that the readings φασι and φησί, that allow Lesches two completely different roles in the passage, are both well represented in the manuscript tradition shows that this passage was not perceived as easy by those who copied it, and it would not be surprising that an attempt made by someone to specify the names of the most canonical contestants successfully entered the text and was then transmitted unanimously.

<sup>39</sup> West 1967: 439-40.

<sup>40</sup> On a general level, it should be noted that Plutarch in general was certainly well aware of the Plutarch's account from the very beginning, or that a marginal 'Lesches' was inserted simply in order to spare Homer the indignity of being beaten by Hesiod. In any case, there is no definitive proof that the lines were ever associated with poems attributed to Lesches, and this makes it particularly unfortunate that they are often included in collections of fragments from the lost works of Lesches.<sup>41</sup> This is not to argue that the verses pronounced by Lesches in this passage are a creation of Plutarch: it is rather to suggest that they could well derive from another source, for example a now lost corpus of hexameters used in poetic contests similar to the collection of verses in the Certamen or indeed fluid oral epic performances and stock phrases used in a witty and provocative way. The fact that the Muses are asked not to sing a particular topic reverses the traditional epic invocation to the Muses, and in tradition of the contest, as he mentions it in three passages. He also commented on the relevant passage from Works and Days, which surely implied some research on the topic. Moreover, he mentions details that are not found anywhere else, e.g. the fact that Amphidamas died in a naval battle during the Lelantine war. More specifically on this exchange of question and answer: in the relevant section of the manuscript of the Certamen (f. 16v), the words καναχήποδες ἵπποι are missing. Plutarch's text was used to complete the hexameter by the earliest editors of the Certamen (e.g. Nietzsche 1871) and P.Petr. I 25, published in 1891 (Mahaffy 1891) confirmed that Plutarch's reading was current already in the third century BC (cf. ll. 45-7). In both the Certamen (97-8) and the papyrus (P.Petr. I 25 ll. 38-41) the question is different from the one in Plutarch, and as he was well informed about the tradition of the answer, he might also have been aware of the alternative question with which it circulated.

---

<sup>41</sup> Because of the mention of Lesches these verses have sometimes been connected with the Little Iliad and interpreted as its incipit (fr. 1 Bernabé: see Bernabé 1984 and 1987: 76). But the poem is more likely to have started with another couplet, transmitted in Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 16 and explicitly glossed as the beginning of it (fr. 1 Davies: see Davies 1989: 60, id. 1989b: 6 and Burgess 2001: 24). Fr. 1 Davies is also more ancient than the Plutarchean couplet can be proved to be, as it is found in an inscription from the fifth century BC (Vinogradov 1969: 142-3; Vinogradov and Zolotarev 1990: 109 and 119 fig. C = SEG 1990: 612). For other hypotheses see also Scafoglio 2006. I discuss this matter at length in a forthcoming article.

itself suggests a riddling or agonistic context for their creation, which is precisely the kind of context in which Plutarch mentions them.

There is one further peculiarity to this exchange of verses: the second verse in the question is left incomplete. Lesches is asking his opponent to talk about something that never was in the past and never shall be in the future; the second verse is then abruptly interrupted. Anyone familiar with the formulae of epic poetry will notice that the present is not mentioned: the couplet recalls the famous epic formula  $\tau\acute{\alpha} \tau' \epsilon\acute{\omicron}\nu\tau\alpha \tau\acute{\alpha} \tau' \epsilon\sigma\sigma\acute{\omicron}\mu\epsilon\nu\alpha \pi\rho\acute{o} \tau' \epsilon\acute{\omicron}\nu\tau\alpha$ , which is also used in the corresponding question in the Certamen and in P.Petr. I 25.<sup>42</sup> Most remarkably, because of the absence of the present, the question in Plutarch does not contain an obvious difficulty: if asked not to sing of the past or the future, Hesiod could refer, in his answer, to anything happening in the present.<sup>43</sup> Again it is instructive to see how this fits the context in which the verses appear, in particular by looking at the treatment of time as a philosophical issue in the Dinner. In the passage described at the beginning, Bias solves the riddle posed to Amasis by referring to the present time: Amasis should ask the king of the Ethiopians 'to stop the rivers which are now emptying into the ocean depths, while he is engaged in drinking up the ocean that now is; for this is the ocean with which the demand is concerned, and not the one which is to be'.<sup>44</sup> In another passage (153b), time is defined as partaking of past, present and future; in another work (On Common Conception against the Stoics 1081c-1082d), Plutarch criticizes the Stoic doctrine according to which time partakes only of past and

---

<sup>42</sup> The formula is found at: Il. 1.71; Hes. Th. 38; Th. 32 in the shortened form  $\tau\acute{\alpha} \tau' \epsilon\sigma\sigma\acute{\omicron}\mu\epsilon\nu\alpha \pi\rho\acute{o} \tau' \epsilon\acute{\omicron}\nu\tau\alpha$  (again leaving out the present).

<sup>43</sup> The reference to the tomb of Zeus, something that can never exist because of the immortality of the god, well responds to the question formulated in the Certamen (see 97-8n. and 100-1n.). Strictly speaking, it is not appropriate in this context.

<sup>44</sup> 151d: Φραζέτω τοίνυν, ἔφη, ἑὼ Αἰθίοπι τοὺς ἐμβάλλοντας εἰς τὰ πελάγη ποταμοὺς ἐπισχεῖν, ἕως αὐτὸς ἐκπίνει τὴν νῦν οὖσαν θάλατταν· περὶ ταύτης γὰρ τὸ ἐπίταγμα γέγονεν, οὐ τῆς ὕστερον ἐσομένης.' The above translation is by Babbitt 1928.

future. In Lesches' question the importance of the present is demonstrated by its very absence: a verse is left incomplete and thus the couplet contains no difficulty to solve. The curtailed couplet suits Plutarch's philosophical discourse on time better than any corresponding verse transmitted in the rest of the tradition; and this in turn suggests that, whatever Plutarch's source, he felt quite free to adapt it for his own purposes.

The other two passages by Plutarch confirm that he allowed himself to deal with the story of the contest freely and creatively. In Table Talk (674f-675a) Plutarch says that poetry competitions are ancient, but although many expect him to give as an example the contest between Homer and Hesiod, he 'scorns this hackneyed lore of the schoolroom':

ἐνίοις μὲν οὖν ἐπίδοξος ἡμῖν ἔωλα παραθήσειν πράγματα, τὰς Οἰολύκου τοῦ Θετταλοῦ ταφὰς καὶ τὰς Ἀμφιδάμαντος τοῦ Χαλκιδέως ἐν αἷς Ὅμηρον καὶ Ἡσίοδον ἱστοροῦσιν ἔπεισι διαγωνίσασθαι. καταβαλὼν δὲ ταῦτα τῷ διατεθρυλῆσθαι πάνθ' ὑπὸ τῶν γραμματικῶν[...]

In a scholium to Hesiod's Works and Days (fr. 84 Sandbach = sch. Op. 650-62), Plutarch is said to have athetized the passage in which Hesiod proclaims his victory as a later interpolation, because it contains nothing of value:

ταῦτα πάντα περὶ τῆς Χαλκίδος <καὶ> τοῦ Ἀμφιδάμαντος καὶ τοῦ ἄθλου καὶ τοῦ τρίποδος ἐμβεβλήσθαι φησιν ὁ Πλούταρχος οὐδὲν ἔχοντα χρηστόν. τὸν μὲν οὖν Ἀμφιδάμαντα ναυμαχοῦντα πρὸς Ἑρετριέας ὑπὲρ τοῦ Ληλάντου ἀποθανεῖν· ἄθλα δ' ἐπ' αὐτῷ καὶ ἀγῶνας θεῖναι τελευτήσαντι τοὺς παῖδας· νικῆσαι δ' ἀγωνιζόμενον τὸν Ἡσίοδον καὶ ἄθλον μουσικὸν τρίποδα λαβεῖν καὶ ἀναθεῖναι τοῦτον ἐν τῷ Ἑλικῶνι, ὅπου καὶ κάτοχος ἐγγέγονει ταῖς Μούσαις, καὶ ἐπίγραμμα ἐπὶ τούτῳ θρυλοῦσι. πάντα οὖν ταῦτα ληρώδη λέγων ἐκεῖνος, ἀπ' αὐτῶν ἄρχεται τῶν εἰς τὸν καιρὸν τοῦ πλοῦ συντεινόντων, ἥματα πεντήκοντα'.

The explanations proposed for Plutarch's athetesis agree on one fundamental point: in Plutarch's opinion the contest between Homer and Hesiod does not have a historical basis.<sup>45</sup> Plutarch, the scrupulous critic of literature, rejects the authenticity of the contest story; and, precisely because he regards it as essentially fictional, he feels free to adapt it to his own creative purposes, in suitable contexts such as his Dinner of the Seven Sages.<sup>46</sup>

<sup>45</sup> See e.g. Lamberton 1988.

Indeed, it is quite possible that in Plutarch's version of the contest Homer did not feature at all. If Ὀμήρου καὶ Ἡσιόδου in the Dinner of the Seven Sages 153f-154a can be dismissed as a gloss, then it is possible that Plutarch's version of the contest did not actually include Homer, but had Lesches as a minor, and chronologically viable, replacement.

What can, in my view, be concluded without controversy is this. First of all, Plutarch differs considerably from the version of the contest we know from the Certamen, however we read and edit his text. Secondly, it is clear that his version of the story was variously discussed and altered, so that external glosses may have entered the text early on in the history of its transmission, and so that part of the manuscripts have Lesches as narrator of, rather than participant in, the contest. The role of Lesches as narrator aligns Plutarch's version more closely with the Certamen, and may be the result of ancient or medieval attempts at harmonising the story. But it must be said that Lesches' role as narrator, and Homer's role as participant, do not accord with Plutarch's own take on the story of the contest in other works: his Table Talk 674f-675a and his Commentary on Hesiod's Works and Days fr. 84 Sandbach count against it. Finally, the manuscript reading which makes Lesches into a narrator of the contest has the knock-on effect of creating one more Lesches fragment, which is then sometimes included in collections of his work. On that basis, some scholars argue for a very early origin of the story of the contest, ascribing its creation to a sixth- or seventh-century Lesches. That seems to me a conclusion of very dubious standing. Beyond the uncertainties, my discussion of Plutarch shows how flexible the story of the contest was, and how often it was manipulated, in antiquity and in modern times, through the work of editors.

---

<sup>46</sup> Cf. also Kirk 1950: 150 n. 1: 'Plutarch had in any case doubted the authenticity of the Amphidamas-passage at Erga 654 ff., and would not be particularly concerned over the accuracy of Periander's story'.

Dio Chrysostom, Oration on Kingship 2.7-12.

Dio Chrysostom (first-second century AD) mentions the contest between Homer and Hesiod in his second oration On Kingship. In this work, Alexander the Great and his father Philip on their way home from Chaeronea engage in a conversation about Homer which is in fact, as is stated at the very beginning of the work, a discussion about kingship as well.<sup>47</sup> In the first few paragraphs Alexander puts forward the idea that lies at the heart of the oration: kings should read Homer, because his poetry alone is 'truly noble, lofty and suited to a king'<sup>48</sup>. His father then asks him about his opinion of other poets, including Hesiod, and this gives the opportunity for a reflection on the story of the contest between Homer and Hesiod that also resembles a 're-enactment' of it, with Philip and Alexander performing Hesiodic and Homeric verses respectively.<sup>49</sup>

(7) [...] πάνυ οὖν ὁ Φίλιππος αὐτὸν ἠγάσθη τῆς μεγαλοφροσύνης, ὅτι δῆλος ἦν οὐδὲν φαῦλον οὐδὲ ταπεινὸν ἐπινοῶν, ἀλλὰ τοῖς τε ἥρωσι καὶ τοῖς ἡμιθέοις παραβαλλόμενος. (8) ὁμῶς δὲ κινεῖν αὐτὸν βουλόμενος, Τὸν δὲ Ἡσίοδον, ᾧ Ἀλέξανδρε, ὀλίγου ἄξιον κρίνεις, ἔφη, ποιητήν; Οὐκ ἔγωγε, εἶπεν, ἀλλὰ τοῦ παντός, οὐ μέντοι βασιλεῦσιν οὐδὲ στρατηγοῖς ἴσως. Ἀλλὰ τίσι μὴν; καὶ ὁ Ἀλέξανδρος γελάσας, Τοῖς ποιμέσιν, ἔφη, καὶ τοῖς τέκτοσι καὶ τοῖς γεωργοῖς. τοὺς μὲν γὰρ ποιμένας φησὶ φιλεῖσθαι ὑπὸ τῶν Μουσῶν, τοῖς δὲ τέκτοσι μάλα ἐμπείρως παραινεῖ πηλίκον χρὴ τὸν ἄξονα τεμεῖν, καὶ τοῖς γεωργοῖς, ὅπηνίκα ἄρξασθαι πίθου. (9) Τί οὖν; οὐχὶ ταῦτα χρήσιμα, ἔφη, τοῖς ἀνθρώποις, ὁ Φίλιππος; Οὐχ ἡμῖν γε, εἶπεν, ᾧ πάτερ, οὐδὲ Μακεδόσι τοῖς νῦν, ἀλλὰ τοῖς πρότερον, ἡνίκα νέμοντες καὶ γεωργοῦντες Ἰλλυριοῖς ἐδούλευον καὶ Τριβαλλοῖς. Οὐδὲ τὰ περὶ τὸν σπόρον, ἔφη, καὶ τὸν ἀμητόν, ὁ Φίλιππος, ἀρέσκει σοι τοῦ Ἡσιόδου μεγαλοπρεπῶς οὕτως εἰρημένα;

Πληιάδων Ἀτλαγενέων ἐπιτελλομενάων
ἄρχεσθ' ἀμητοῦ, ἀρότιο δὲ δυσομενάων.

<sup>47</sup> Par. 1: οἱ δὲ αὐτοὶ λόγοι οὗτοι σχεδόν τι καὶ περὶ βασιλείας ἦσαν.

<sup>48</sup> Par. 6: τὴν δέ γε Ὀμήρου ποίησιν μόνην ὁρῶ τῷ ὄντι γενναίαν καὶ μεγαλοπρεπῇ καὶ βασιλικῇ. The above translation is by Cohoon 1932.

<sup>49</sup> Koning 2010: 263.

(10) Πολύ γε μάλλον, εἶπεν ὁ Ἀλέξανδρος, τὰ παρ' Ὀμήρῳ γεωργικά. Καὶ ποῦ περὶ γεωργίας εἶρηκεν Ὅμηρος; ἤρετο ὁ Φίλιππος, ἥ τὰ ἐν τῇ ἀσπίδι μιμήματα λέγεις τῶν ἀρούντων καὶ θεριζόντων καὶ τρυγώντων; Ἕκιστα γε, εἶπεν ὁ Ἀλέξανδρος, ἀλλὰ ἐκεῖνα πολὺ μάλλον·

οἱ δ' ὥστ' ἀμητῆρες ἐναντίοι ἀλλήλοισιν ὄγμον ἐλαύνωσιν ἀνδρὸς μάκαρος κατ' ἄρουραν πυρῶν ἢ κριθῶν· τὰ δὲ δράγματα ταρφέα πίπτει ὥς Τρῶες καὶ Ἀχαιοὶ ἐπ' ἀλλήλοισι θορόντες δήουν, οὐδ' ἕτεροι μνώνοντ' ὀλοοῖο φόβοιο.

(11) Ταῦτα μέντοι ποιῶν Ὅμηρος ἤττατο ὑπὸ Ἡσιόδου, ὁ Φίλιππος εἶπεν· ἢ οὐκ ἀκήκοας τὸ ἐπίγραμμα τὸ ἐν Ἑλικῶνι ἐπὶ τοῦ τρίποδος·

Ἡσιόδος Μούσαις Ἑλικωνίσι τόνδ' ἀνέθηκεν
ὔμνῳ νικήσας ἐν Χαλκίδι θεῖον Ὅμηρον;

(12) Καὶ μάλα δικαίως, εἶπεν ὁ Ἀλέξανδρος, ἤττατο· οὐ γὰρ ἐν βασιλεῦσιν ἠγωνίζετο, ἀλλ' ἐν γεωργοῖς καὶ ιδιώταις, μάλλον δὲ ἐν ἀνθρώποις φιληδόνοις καὶ μαλακοῖς. τοιγαροῦν ἠμύνατο τοὺς Εὐβοέας διὰ τῆς ποιήσεως Ὅμηρος. Πῶς; ἤρετο θαυμάσας ὁ Φίλιππος. Ὅτι μόνους αὐτοὺς τῶν Ἑλλήνων περιέκειρεν αἰσχιστά, κομᾶν ὀπισθεν ἀφείς ὥσπερ οἱ νῦν τοὺς παῖδας τοὺς ἀπαλούς. [...] (ed. Cohoon)

In this oration the story of the contest between Homer and Hesiod is presented within another quasi-competitive context, a contest over Homer and Hesiod acted by Philip and Alexander. Through the way he develops the narrative of both competitions, Dio shows a good awareness of some of the most common features of the tradition of the contest between Homer and Hesiod (e.g. the finest passages, the outcome, the tripod and the epigram celebrating Hesiod's victory). At the same time he stages the final judgment in the way that best suits his work.

Alexander insists that Homer's is the only poetry suitable for kings, while the rest is for 'shepherds, carpenters, and farmers' (par. 8): Hesiod does give useful advice to such people, but not to a ruler such as he is. To this Philip replies by asking his son what he thinks about some magnificent (cf. μεγαλοπρεπῶς, par. 9) lines by Hesiod about seed-time and harvest: a performance of Works and Days 383-4 follows. These verses, famously, are the beginning of the passage that Hesiod chooses as his finest in the contest. Here too Philip seems to select these verses because they stand out in the Hesiodic production.

To this challenge Alexander replies that he prefers what Homer says about agriculture, and performs a passage from the Iliad, as in the rest of the tradition of the contest. In this case, however, the selected verses are Il. 11.67-71, a simile in which warriors of the Trojan and Achaean side are said to leap on one another like reapers who ‘start from opposite ends of the field of a powerful man, and drive their path through wheat or barley, and the handfuls fall thick and fast’. This simile is chosen because it uses an impressive agricultural simile to represent a battle, thereby revealing the kind of agricultural work Alexander favours.<sup>50</sup>

At this point, the story of the contest between Homer and Hesiod makes its way into the narrative. Philip remarks that ‘despite such beautiful lines’ (par. 11) Homer was defeated by Hesiod, and offers as evidence for this the epigram of the victory and the tripod on which it was inscribed. The tripod and its epigram are valuable pieces of evidence and are difficult to overlook: indeed these details come from Hesiod himself (Op. 657-8).<sup>51</sup> Alexander therefore, to defend his thesis of Homer’s superiority over Hesiod, uses another detail of the story, which is omitted by Hesiod: the final verdict. In Alexander’s version the people who judged the performance were not ‘kings, but farmers and plain folk, or, rather, men who were lovers of pleasure and effeminate’, and these are the people, as Alexander pointed out earlier, who can find useful advice in Hesiod’s poetry and prefer it to Homer’s. A king, Alexander seems to claim implicitly, could not have issued such a verdict.<sup>52</sup> Consequently, the existence of a character such as Panedes is completely omitted here. Dio may well have

---

<sup>50</sup> See also Koning 2010: 264 and n. 95.

<sup>51</sup> See Introduction on Hesiod, esp. pp. 13-14.

<sup>52</sup> The opposition between Homer and Hesiod on which the judgement is grounded, made on the basis of the different subject matters of the poems and the people they appeal to, is well rooted in ancient literature. See esp. and most recently Koning 2010: 269-95.

known it, because the name of that king was already circulating by the third century BC;<sup>53</sup> but a king who prefers Hesiod over Homer would be a threat for the main argument of the oration: kings should like Homer.<sup>54</sup>

Another interesting detail that may show that Dio was very well conversant with the biographical and exegetical tradition is that Alexander claims that Homer was 'rightly' (par. 12: μάλα δικαίως) defeated: this accords with traditions such as that of the Certamen, where it was 'right' for Hesiod to win because of his subject matter.<sup>55</sup>

Philostratus, Heroikos 43.7-10.

Philostratus' Heroikos (second-third century AD)<sup>56</sup> stages a dialogue that takes place in the Thracian Chersonesus between a local vinedresser and a Phoenician merchant who had to interrupt his navigation because of unfavorable winds. The vinedresser turns out to be a friend of Protesilaos, the first Greek hero to die at Troy.<sup>57</sup> Together they cultivate the vines and discuss the Homeric poems.

---

<sup>53</sup> P.Petr. I 25, l. 4. Incidentally, as it has been noted (Richardson 1984 and Koning 2010: 264 n. 97), this confutes Heldmann's theory that the scene of Panedes is a late addition to the contest story made precisely in response to Dio's account (see Heldmann 1982: 45-53).

<sup>54</sup> Dio could also have attributed the verdict to the king and blame him for an unwise decision; but as the character who is making this comment, Alexander, is himself a king, avoiding mention of another king and blaming the verdict on common people probably allows Dio to keep his arguments on a safer level.

<sup>55</sup> See Cert. 208.

<sup>56</sup> The attribution and dating of the Heroikos is debated. The Suda (φ 421-3) mentions three people with the name Philostratus and attributes the Heroikos to Philostratus II, son of Philostratus I the son of Vero, whose death is placed in 244-9 AD. Although inconsistencies between some of the information given in the Suda entries and internal evidence from the works of the Philostrati have raised doubts about the reliability of the Suda entries themselves, the majority of modern scholars seems to accept the attribution of the Heroikos to Philostratus II: for the debate see esp. Solmsen 1940, Anderson 1986: 294-5, de Lannoy 1997: 2391, Berenson Maclean and Bradshaw Aitken 2001: xlii-xlv.

<sup>57</sup> See Il. 2.695-710.

At 43.5 the Phoenician claims that knowledge of the Trojan deeds shown in the Homeric epics is 'more fitting for a god than for a mortal'.<sup>58</sup> To prove that Homer was in fact a man, although a divinely inspired one, the vinedresser offers a brief survey of biographical information about Homer, which includes the episode of his contest with Hesiod:

γέγονε γάρ, ξένε, γέγονε ποιητῆς Ὅμηρος καὶ ἦδεν, ὡς μὲν φασιν ἕτεροι μετὰ τέτταρα καὶ εἴκοσιν ἔτη τῶν Τρωικῶν, οἱ δὲ μετὰ ἑπτὰ καὶ εἴκοσι πρὸς ταῖς ἑκατόν, ὅτε τὴν ἀποικίαν ἐς Ἰωνίαν ἔστειλαν, οἱ δὲ ἐξήκοντα καὶ ἑκατόν ἔτη γεγονέναι μετὰ τὴν Τροίαν ἐπὶ Ὀμηρόν τε φασὶ καὶ Ἡσίοδον, ὅτε δὴ ἄσαι ἄμφω ἐν Χαλκίδι, τὸν μὲν τὰ ἑπτὰ ἔπη τὰ περὶ τοῖν Αἰάντοιν καὶ ὡς αἱ φάλαγγες αὐτοῖς ἀραρυῖαί τε ἦσαν καὶ καρτεραί, τὸν δὲ τὰ πρὸς τὸν ἀδελφὸν τὸν ἑαυτοῦ Πέρσην, ἐν οἷς αὐτὸν ἔργων τε ἐκέλευσεν ἅπτεσθαι καὶ γεωργία προσκεῖσθαι, ὡς μὴ δέοιτο ἐτέρων μηδὲ πεινώῃ. καὶ ἀληθέστερα, ξένε, περὶ τῶν Ὀμήρου χρόνων ταῦτα· ξυντίθεται γὰρ αὐτοῖς ὁ Πρωτεσίλεως. δύο γοῦν ποιητῶν ὕμνον ποτὲ εἰπόντων ἐς αὐτὸν ἐνταυθοῖ καὶ ἀπελθόντων, ἥρετό με ὁ ἥρως ἀφικόμενος ὅτῳ αὐτῶν ψηφίζοιμην· ἐμοῦ δὲ τὸν φαυλότερον ἐπαινέσαντος (καὶ γὰρ μᾶλλον ἔτυχέ με ἡρηνκῶς) γελάσας ὁ Πρωτεσίλεως „καὶ Πανίδης” εἶπεν, „ἀμπελουργέ, ταῦτόν σοι πέπονθεν· Χαλκίδος γὰρ τῆς ἐπ’ Εὐρύπῳ βασιλεὺς ὢν ἐκεῖνος Ἡσιόδῳ κατὰ Ὀμήρου ἐψηφίσατο, καὶ ταῦτα τὸ γένειον μεῖζον ἔχων ἢ σύ. (Ed. de Lannoy)

The way Philostratus discusses the life of Homer shows that he was familiar with the Homeric biographical tradition, and it seems that he may have had access to material that was similar to the extant Lives of the poet.<sup>59</sup> As it is typical of the Lives, several possible solutions for the date of the poet are listed and attributed generically to 'some people'; Homer's date is measured in relation to his chronological proximity to events such as the Trojan war and the Ionian migration, or to poets such as Hesiod.<sup>60</sup> In the passage that follows the

---

<sup>58</sup> ὅθεν τὸ ὑπὸ ἐνίων λεγόμενον, ὡς Ἀπόλλων αὐτὰ ποιήσας τὸν Ὀμηρον ἐπέγραψε τῇ ποιήσει σφόδρα μοι δοκεῖ ἐρρῶσθαι· τὸ γὰρ γινώσκειν ταῦτα θεῷ μᾶλλον ἢ ἀνθρώπῳ ἔουκεν. All the translations of passages from the Heroikos are by Berenson Maclean and Bradshaw Aitken 2001.

<sup>59</sup> Kim 2010: 207 n. 86 too cursorily remarks the similarity between this biographical interlude and some of the extant Lives of Homer.

<sup>60</sup> In particular, that Homer was born twenty-four or one hundred and twenty-seven years after mention of the contest, then, Homer is said to travel to several places, including Ithaca.<sup>61</sup> Finally, Homer emerges from the discussion of his birthplace as being ἄπολις, a person claimed by all cities because he belongs to none.<sup>62</sup> In the same or similar sources Philostratus must have also found information about the story of the contest between Homer and Hesiod, about which he seems to be well informed. As in the Certamen (44-55) the episode of the contest is introduced in connection with the discussion of Homer's chronology, with explicit reference to the issue of his contemporaneity with Hesiod. The passages the poets recite (although no verse is quoted) are clearly taken from the same sections of the Works and Days and the Iliad as in most versions of the contest story, but the specific selection is peculiar to this account: the description of Hesiod's performance suggests that the poet is reciting Op. 384-404;<sup>63</sup> Homer recites the 'seven epics' on the two Ajaxes and their ranks of battle.<sup>64</sup>

---

the Trojan war is known from no other source; his contemporaneity to the Ionian migration is mentioned in Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 1.3 (= Arist. fr. 76 Rose), Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 2.3 and Procl. Vit. Hom. 7, but in the last two sources (where the information is said to go back to the school of Aristarchus) the Ionian migration is dated one hundred and forty years after the Trojan war, rather than one hundred and twenty-seven as in the Heroikos; that Homer was born one hundred and sixty years after the Trojan war is known also from Suda s.v. Ὅμηρος 4. For more discussion on Homer's dating in antiquity see also commentary on Cert. 44-55 and cross-references therein, with bibliography.

<sup>61</sup> For biographical traditions on Homer and Ithaca, including also attempts to establish genealogical connections between the poet and some Odyssean characters, see commentary on Cert. 23-4n. and 25-6n.

<sup>62</sup> For the diffusion of this idea in antiquity see commentary on Cert. 7-8.

<sup>63</sup> The expression ὥς μὴ δέοιτο ἐτέρων, μὴδὲ πεινώῃ sums up the content of Op. 395-404, where Hesiod explains that agriculture makes a man self-sufficient. This lead West 1967: 442 n. 3 to suggest that in the Certamen too 'originally the extract may have gone on to v. 404'. But it seems safer to conclude that the length of the selected passages was one of the semi-fixed features of the story that could be purposefully modified, rather than postulating the existence of an 'original' extract – impossible to verify – and several 'variations' from it.

<sup>64</sup> It is not clear what τὰ ἑπτὰ ἔπη precisely refers to. Some manuscripts omit ἑπτὰ (see de

Philostratus also knew the outcome of the contest, one of the few non-modifiable elements of the tradition. But Protesilaos, the character to whom Philostratus entrusts the report of the competition, has too high an opinion of Homer to accept the verdict without protest. According to the hero, Homer 'surpassed all the poets he encountered, each in the area of their expertise', and more pertinently is explicitly said to 'include all matters pertaining to peace' and 'touch on agricultural tasks and the appropriate seasons for performing them'.<sup>65</sup> These are famously and typically Hesiodic areas of expertise, which granted him victory in some versions of the contest story. Philostratus therefore expresses disagreement with the verdict by accusing the judge Panedes of having chosen the simpler of the two poets, a strategy that has often been used to justify Homer's defeat. Philostratus' account has many points in common with Dio's: for instance, both insert the contest between Homer and Hesiod within another contest (a dispute between Alexander and Philip in Dio, one between two poets singing hymns to Protesilaus in Philostratus)<sup>66</sup> and both disagree with the final verdict. But the two different narrative contexts require framing the story differently, and offering different details. Hence, according to Dio Hesiod is awarded the victory by the common people because of the connection between Homer's poetry and kingship established in that work. That connection is not present in Philostratus, who can thus make use of the figure of the incompetent king Panedes.

---

Lannoy's apparatus ad loc.) perhaps because this number creates difficulty: such selection must include at least eight verses to reach a syntactical stop (Il. 13.126-33) as in Cert. 191-8, rather than seven.

<sup>65</sup> Her. 25.3: καὶ ὅποσα κατ' εἰρήνην εἰσὶ καὶ χοροὺς καὶ ὥδ'ας καὶ ἔρωτας καὶ δαῖτας ἔργα τε, ὧν γεωργία ἄπτεται, καὶ ὥρας, αἱ σημαίνουσιν, ὅποσα ἐς τὴν γῆν δεῖ πράττειν.

<sup>66</sup> Plutarch too inserts the story of the contest within a different story about a different contest in wisdom (Dinner of the Seven Sages 153f-154a).

Lucian, True Story 2.20-22.

Lucian (second century AD) briefly alludes to the story of the contest in his True Story. At 2.22 the two poets are said to compete on the occasion of the Θανατούσια, the Games of the Dead on the Island of the Blessed, and Hesiod wins 'although actually Homer was far the best'. This playful comment is concise, but clearly alludes to a well known story: Lucian shows the most common reaction of readers to the outcome of the competition, a fixed feature of the contest tradition which was rarely accepted without surprise. The allusion to the contest follows one of the most famous and entertaining episodes of the whole True Story, the interview with Homer. This passage shows that Lucian knew ancient Homeric scholarship and biography well:

(20) Οὐπω δὲ δύο ἢ τρεῖς ἡμέραι διεληλύθεσαν, καὶ προσελθὼν ἐγὼ Ὀμήρῳ τῷ ποιητῇ, σχολῆς οὔσης ἀμφοῖν, τά τε ἄλλα ἐπυνθανόμην καὶ ὅθεν εἴη, λέγων τοῦτο μάλιστα παρ' ἡμῖν εἰσέτι νῦν ζητεῖσθαι. ὁ δὲ οὐδ' αὐτὸς μὲν ἀγνοεῖν ἔφασκεν ὡς οἱ μὲν Χίων, οἱ δὲ Σμυρναῖον, πολλοὶ δὲ Κολοφώνιον αὐτὸν νομίζουσιν· εἶναι μέντοι γε ἔλεγεν Βαβυλώνιος, καὶ παρὰ γε τοῖς πολίταις οὐχ Ὀμηρος, ἀλλὰ Τιγράνης καλεῖσθαι· ὕστερον δὲ ὁμηρεύσας παρὰ τοῖς Ἑλλησιν ἀλλάξαι τὴν προσηγορίαν. ἔτι δὲ καὶ περὶ τῶν ἀθετουμένων στίχων ἐπηρώτων, εἰ ὑπ' ἐκείνου εἰσὶ γεγραμμένοι. καὶ ὅς ἔφασκε πάντας αὐτοῦ εἶναι. κατεγίνωσκον οὖν τῶν ἀμφὶ τὸν Ζηνόδοτον καὶ Ἀρίσταρχον γραμματικῶν πολλὴν τὴν ψυχρολογίαν. ἐπεὶ δὲ ταῦτα ἱκανῶς ἀπεκέκριτο, πάλιν αὐτὸν ἠρώτων τί δὴ ποτε ἀπὸ τῆς μήνιδος τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐποίησατο· καὶ ὅς εἶπεν οὕτως ἐπελθεῖν αὐτῷ μηδὲν ἐπιτηδεύσαντι. καὶ μὴν κακείνο ἐπεθύμουν εἰδέναι, εἰ προτέραν ἔγραψεν τὴν Ὀδύσσειαν τῆς Ἰλιάδος, ὡς οἱ πολλοὶ φασιν· ὁ δὲ ἠρνεῖτο. ὅτι μὲν γὰρ οὐδὲ τυφλὸς ἦν, ὃ καὶ αὐτὸ περὶ αὐτοῦ λέγουσιν, αὐτίκα ἠπιστάμην· ἑώρα γάρ, ὥστε οὐδὲ πυνθάνεσθαι ἐδεόμην [...] (22) Προϊόντος δὲ τοῦ χρόνου ἐνέστη ὁ ἀγὼν ὁ παρ' αὐτοῖς, τὰ Θανατούσια. ἠγωνοθέτει δὲ Ἀχιλλεὺς τὸ πέμπτον καὶ Θησεὺς τὸ ἕβδομον. τὰ μὲν οὖν ἄλλα μακρὸν ἂν εἴη λέγειν· τὰ δὲ κεφάλαια τῶν πραχθέντων διηγήσομαι [...] ποιητῶν δὲ τῇ μὲν ἀληθείᾳ παρὰ πολὺ ἐκράτει Ὀμηρος, ἐνίκησεν δὲ ὁμως Ἡσίοδος. τὰ δὲ ἄθλα ἦν ἅπασι στέφανος πλακεῖς ἐκ πτερῶν ταωνείων. (Ed. Macleod)

The True Story, as Lucian himself points out in the prologue, invites readers to take part in a game of allusion. In order for this game to work, Lucian must refer to works or passages that are famous enough to be recognised by his audience.<sup>67</sup> The fact that he mentions Homer's superiority over Hesiod and his unexpected defeat means that these features were common enough in the contest tradition to be recognised by Lucian's audience. By choosing this as the object of one of his parodic allusions, Lucian is making fun of all the scholarly efforts that had been made to cope with it, just as in ch. 20 he ridicules the debates over other famous controversies of Homeric scholarship.<sup>68</sup>

Before referring to the contest, Lucian fills the episode of the interview with Homer with learned allusions to many other details of the ancient Homeric biographical tradition.<sup>69</sup> First, Lucian refers to the dispute about Homer's birthplace by mentioning the three contenders generally recognised in antiquity as having the strongest and most ancient claims on Homer's origins: Smyrne, Chios and Colophon.<sup>70</sup> Homer's own surprising assertion of his Babylonian origins, then, works well as a parody of the many outlandish solutions that had been proposed in antiquity to the famous question concerning his birthplace.<sup>71</sup> But Lucian, as well as making a preposterous

---

<sup>67</sup> See e.g. VH 1.2: [...] καὶ τῶν ἱστορουμένων ἕκαστον οὐκ ἀκωμωδῆτως ἤνικται πρὸς τινὰς τῶν παλαιῶν ποιητῶν τε καὶ συγγραφέων καὶ φιλοσόφων πολλὰ τεράστια καὶ μυθώδη συγγεγραφότων οὓς καὶ ὀνομαστὶ ἂν ἔγραφον, εἰ μὴ καὶ αὐτῷ σοι ἐκ τῆς ἀναγνώσεως φανεῖσθαι ἔμελλον. Studies on this allusive method and the proem of True Story are Hall 1981: 339-54, Georgiadou and Larmour 1998: 22-4 and 51-9, Moellendorff 2000.

<sup>68</sup> Georgiadou and Larmour 1998: 205 suggest that Homer in VH does not win the contest because this would not be consistent with all the criticism and parodies Lucian has made of him. But this seems secondary: first and most importantly, Lucian is making a playful allusion to a well known tradition.

<sup>69</sup> Full studies of this episode are Jones 1986: 54-5, Georgiadou and Larmour 1998: 200-3, Moellendorff 2000: 367-73, Nesselrath 2002, Ni Mheallaigh 2009, Kim 2010: 162-8. Together with the allusions to Homeric biographical traditions that will be discussed below, Lucian in this passage refers also to ancient textual exegesis: chronological priority of the Iliad over the Odyssey, the athetised verses, the first word of the Iliad. On these, see quoted bibliography.

<sup>70</sup> See Cert. 8-17n.

<sup>71</sup> See for example Suda s.v. Ὅμηρος 2 for a list of no fewer than twenty cities that had claims on suggestion, is also alluding to the doctrines of a specific Homeric school: we know from some ancient scholia on Il. 23.79 that scholars of the school of Pergamum such as Crates and Zenodotus of Mallos argued that Homer was a Chaldaean.<sup>72</sup> Homer's claim also allows for a series of interrelated allusions to other biographical anecdotes. Lucian says that the Babylonian Homer was originally called Tigranes, a name that evokes the river Tigris in Babylonia: according to many biographical accounts Homer was originally called Melesigenes, a name associated with the river Meles which runs through one of the alleged Homeric hometowns, Smyrne.<sup>73</sup> Homer is then said to have changed his name after being taken hostage, and this too echoes a well attested biographical anecdote.<sup>74</sup> Tigranes, moreover, is the name of a number of historical kings who were likewise taken hostage, and this creates the possibility for further levels of allusion.<sup>75</sup> Finally, the feature of Homer's persona

---

the poet, many of which were outside the Greek world. See also Heath 1998.

<sup>72</sup> See e.g. Bompaire 1998: 110 n. 76, Georgiadou and Larmour 1998: 201, Broggiato 2001: 181 n. 161. The parody of the school of Pergamum is balanced later on by the mention of the other main centre of Homeric studies, the Alexandrian school, of which 'the grammarians Zenodotus and Aristarchus' were the most famous exponents. For further discussion of Homer's Babylonian origins see also Matteuzzi 2000-2002 who suggests that Lucian, Syrian by origins, by making Homer a Babylonian wanted to make him his 'fellow-citizen' and his alter ego as an Eastern Greek; see also Zeitlin 2001: 246 and n. 76, Nesselrath 2002: 155, Kim 2010: 165-6.

<sup>73</sup> For the Smyrnean tradition and its features see Cert. 8-12n. and cross-references therein. That the name Tigranes is a parody of Melesigenes has been suggested only by Moellendorf 2000: 368-9. But it is only to be expected that Lucian, when making up an alleged original name for Homer, plays with the existing traditions on the topic. That Lucian was aware of such traditions, and more specifically of the name Melesigenes, is proved by another passage coming from his Dem. Enc. (par. 9): ...πατέρα δὲ Μαίονα τὸν Λυδὸν ἢ ποταμόν, ὅπου γε καὶ τοῦνομα πρὸ τοῦ γνωρίμου τὸ Μελησιγενὴ προκρίνουσιν...

<sup>74</sup> See commentary on Cert. 29-32.

<sup>75</sup> As Allen 2006: 151-4 points out, the name Tigranes, combined with hostageship, became an opportunity for sarcasm for Lucian, who is probably casting doubt on the validity of the Roman custom to influence the attitude of foreigner adolescents towards Rome by taking them as

that is perhaps best known is his blindness: Lucian reverses this too by claiming that it was absolutely clear that Homer could see very well.<sup>76</sup>

The question here – with both the allusions to the names and places of origins of Homer, and the brief reference to his defeat in a competition against Hesiod – is whether Lucian is alluding to specific texts or to well known stories. This is, given the level of our own knowledge, a difficult question to answer, but there seems to be discernable evidence to suggest specific textual allusions, as opposed to more general references to well known debates and anecdotes.

Themistius, Oration 30.348c-349a.

Themistius (fourth century AD) refers to the story of the poetic contest between Homer and Hesiod at the beginning of his Oration 30, known by the title θέσις εἰ γεωργητέον (Should one engage in farming?). This work belongs to the group of Themistius' so-called private orations, a miscellaneous group of rhetorical pieces.<sup>77</sup> It is a brief but enthusiastic piece in praise of agriculture as the fundamental activity for human beings, from which all good things come.<sup>78</sup>

Because of the topic and rhetorical aim of this Oration, Themistius can hostages. Tigranes II, moreover, is actually mentioned in a work of the Lucianic corpus, which is however unanimously considered spurious (Macr. 15). Some ancient sources on Tigranes and hostageship are: Str. 11.15 for Tigranes II taken hostage among the Parthians; Tacitus Annales 2.3.14.26. and 15.1 for Tigranes III and Tigranes V taken hostages among the Romans.

---

<sup>76</sup> On Homer's blindness see Cert. 11-12n.

<sup>77</sup> The modern numbering of Themistius' orations and the division of the corpus in two parts (private and public speeches) have no manuscript support. They were first proposed in Harduinus' edition of Themistius in 1684. See Penella 2000: 6-9 for detailed history and discussion of the modern classification of the speeches in the different editions.

<sup>78</sup> Many reasons have been proposed for Themistius' passionate encomium of the agricultural activities: it may have autobiographical significance; it may have sociopolitical purposes such as encouraging agricultural productivity; or may be related to a specific historical event such as Theodosius' Visigothic treaty of 382 that secured peace for the farmers of the Balkans. Discussion in Maisano 1995: 935 and Penella 2000: 33-4.

conveniently include the story of the triumph of Hesiod, the poet of agriculture, over Homer. Hesiod's victory is here a matter of celebration rather than controversy or disappointment. That such an episode was considered very useful in narrative terms by Themistius is indicated by the fact that he puts it right at the beginning of the work, after a few introductory words that underline how for Hesiod, just as much as for Themistius himself, agriculture and virtue are 'one and the same thing'.<sup>79</sup>

δεῖ δὲ ἤδη καὶ ἡμᾶς Ἡσιόδῳ καὶ Μούσαις ἀκολουθοῦντας ἐπιδείξαι διὰ πλειόνων ὥς ἄρα οὐ μάτην Ἡσίοδος σοφὸς ἐνομίσθη, ἀλλ' εἰς τοσοῦτον εὐκλείας διὰ (d.) τοὺς εἰς γεωργίαν λόγους προῆλθεν, ὥστε καὶ Ὀμήρῳ περὶ σοφίας καὶ μουσικῆς ἐν ταφαῖς Ἀμφιδάμαντος εἰς ἀγῶνα ἐλθὼν παρὰ τῶν κριτῶν τὸν στέφανον καὶ τὴν νίκην ἔχειν. ὁ μὲν γὰρ πολέμους καὶ μάχας καὶ τὸν συνασπισμὸν τοῖν Αἰάντοιν καὶ ἄλλα τοιαῦτα προσῆδεν, ὁ δὲ γῆς τε ὕμνησεν ἔργα καὶ ἡμέρας, ἐν αἷς τὰ ἔργα βελτίω γίνεται· 349. (a.) καὶ διὰ ταῦτα πᾶσι τοῖς κριταῖς κρατεῖ. (Ed. Downey – Norman – Schenkl)

Themistius underlines the ethical value of agriculture from the very first sentences of the work: agriculture is virtue, and one should learn one from the other. The setting of the victory of the wise Hesiod is presented accordingly as a contest 'in wisdom and song' (περὶ σοφίας καὶ μουσικῆς). Of all the several types of challenges that Homer and Hesiod are traditionally said to engage in, then, Themistius chooses the one that best emphasises the traditional image of Hesiod as the poet of agriculture as opposed to that of Homer as the poet of war: the recitation of the two selected passages from the poets' works. As in most versions of the contest that include this scene, Homer performs the scene of 'the two Ajaxes fighting each other'.<sup>80</sup> Hesiod is said to sing, more generically, of 'the earth's works and days' (ὁ δὲ γῆς τε ὕμνησεν ἔργα καὶ ἡμέρας), apparently without referring to any specific passage of the Works and Days but to the work as a whole. The following words, 'the days in the course of which earth's works are augmented' (ἐν αἷς τὰ ἔργα βελτίω γίνεται), underline the positive and constructive effects of Hesiod's poetry on human life (a view that is echoed in the Oration as a whole),<sup>81</sup> as opposed to the destructive ones of 'war and battles' (πολέμους καὶ μάχας), the topic of Homer's song.

---

<sup>79</sup> 348c: καὶ τοὺς περὶ γεωργίας λόγους τοῖς περὶ ἀρετῆς καταμίξας, ὥς ταῦτόν ὄν, γεωργίαν καὶ ἀρετὴν δι' ἀλλήλων καὶ ἅμα μαθόντας εἰδέναι.

<sup>80</sup> Il. 13.126 ff. Whether or not Themistius knew anything about the length of the passage recited is not clear from what he says here.

Because of the importance that is given in this work to agriculture and to Hesiod as its poet par excellence, Themistius cannot but express agreement with the outcome of the competition that favoured Hesiod. To stress the success of Hesiod's performance as much as possible, Themistius claims that the poet 'won the support of all the judges' (πᾶσι τοῖς κριταῖς κρατεῖ): unlike other versions of the story in which Hesiod's victory was not viewed in a positive light, there is no need of singling out the figure of a single judge on whom to blame a questionable verdict, or of a group of people who do not have the necessary expertise to judge such competition. On the contrary, because of the impact of his songs on human life, Hesiod wins unanimously and deservedly.

There is another passage from Themistius' works that describes the same sharp opposition between Homer and Hesiod on the basis of the subject matter of their poems: Or. 15.184c-d. Interestingly, although in that passage that opposition is not dramatised in biographical terms (that is, there is no explicit reference to the poetic contest between Homer and Hesiod), Themistius seems to be using the same elements as the contest story. Specifically, the description of the poets' works echoes the two passages which they traditionally perform when competing against each other:

Ἡσιόδῳ δὲ τῷ Ἀσκραίῳ δόρατα μὲν φρίττοντα καὶ ἀσπίδας συνεριδούσας καὶ ὀλλύντας τε καὶ ὀλλυμένους καὶ αἵματι ῥεομένην τὴν (d.) γῆν οὐκ

---

<sup>81</sup> See e.g. the idea that thanks to agriculture men 'have been relieved of preoccupation with their need for food' and 'look up to heaven and honor the gods and live by a system of justice and law' (350a: τῆς περὶ τροφὴν ἀνάγκης ἀπαλλαγέντες πρὸς οὐρανὸν τε ἀνέβλεψαν θεοὺς τε ἐτίμησαν καὶ δίκη καὶ νόμοις ἐχρήσαντο).

ἐδόκει εἰσενεγκεῖν εἰς τὴν ποίησιν, τὰ δὲ χαμαίζηλα ταῦτα καὶ εἰρηνικὰ καὶ ἀσπαστότερα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις, ὀπηνίκα μὲν χρὴ ἀροῦν, ὀπηνίκα δὲ σπεῖρειν, ὀπηνίκα δὲ κλᾶν τὰς ἀμπέλους καὶ ἡλίκον τὸν ἄξονα τέμνειν καὶ ἡλίκην σφῦραν. καὶ ταῦτα ἄδοντι αὐτῶ ἐκ τοῦ Ἑλικῶνος τὰ ὦτα ὑπεῖχον οἱ Ἕλληνες καὶ ἐκηλοῦντο καὶ ὦντο ὠφελίμους οὐχ ἥττον εἶναι τὰς Ἡσιόδου νοουθεσίας ἢ τὰς Ὀμήρου ἀνδροκτασίας.

What Hesiod is said not to sing (and which is rather attributed to Homer, mentioned in the previous lines) paraphrases Il. 13.130-1 (Cert. 195-6):

φράξαντες δόρυ δουρί, σάκος σάκεϊ προθελύμνω·
ἀσπὶς ἄρ' ἀσπίδ' ἔρειδε, κόρυς κόρυν, ἀνέρα δ' ἀνήρ.

The expression δόρατα μὲν φρίττοντα used by Themistius recalls the Homeric φράξαντες δόρυ δουρί. ἀσπίδας συνερειδούσας reads as a prose version of ἀσπὶς ἄρ' ἀσπίδ' ἔρειδε, and ὁλλύντας τε καὶ ὁλλυμένους has the same meaning as ἔρειδε ... ἀνέρα δ' ἀνήρ. Here, then, we certainly have a specific verbal correspondence between the story of the contest, and the Homeric passage quoted in it, and its rhetorical reworking in Themistius. When Themistius then lists the topics that interested Hesiod, the references to his finest passage (Op. 383-92) seem less pointed but two main features of his poetry are emphasised in both texts: Hesiod teaches all the main agricultural activities and the right moment for each of them. This passage does not mention the story of the contest between Homer and Hesiod explicitly, but the fact that the author does use features of it when drawing an opposition between Homer and Hesiod testifies to the great resonance that this story had in antiquity.

Libanius, Defence of Socrates 65-66.

One of Libanius' works (fourth century AD), the Defence of Socrates, contains a reference to the story of the contest between Homer and Hesiod. This Defence is the longest and most elaborate of the two extant Socratic pieces by Libanius: in this work, an anonymous advocate defends Socrates from the two traditional charges brought against him, corruption of the young and impiety.<sup>82</sup> Part of the accusation is based on the fact that Socrates criticised poets such as Hesiod, Theognis, Homer and Pindar, who have always 'enjoyed honour and glory everywhere and especially in Athens'. In order to show that 'we are perfectly free' to do so, Libanius introduces the poetic competition of Homer and Hesiod as an example.<sup>83</sup>

---

<sup>82</sup> The second Socratic work is a shorter declamation in which Socrates' accusers propose that,

(65) ἡγωνίσαστό ποτε Ὀμήρῳ Ἡσίοδος καὶ τοῦτο αὐτὸς Ἡσίοδος ἐν ἐπιγράμματι διδάσκει φιλοτιμούμενος καὶ λέγων νενικηκέναι τὸν Ὀμηρον. οὐκοῦν εἰ μὲν ἀπάσαις Ἡσίοδος ἐνίκη, πάντες δήπου ληρεῖν ἡγοῦντο τὸν Ὀμηρον· εἰ δ' οἱ μὲν τοῦτον ἡγοῦντο βελτίῳ, παρὰ δὲ τοῖς πλείοσιν εὐδοκίμει τὰ τοῦ Ἡσιόδου, τῶν οὐκ ἐπαινούντων ἐκάτερος ἐτετυχήκει καὶ δῆλον ὡς τοῦ συλλόγου διαλυθέντος οἱ μὲν τούτῳ θέμενοι τὸν Ἡσίοδον ἐκάκιζον, οἱ δὲ ἐκείνῳ τοῦτον. αὐτοῖς γὰρ οὕτω γε ἐβοήθουν οἱ δὲ ἐκείνῳ τοῦτον. αὐτοῖς γὰρ οὕτω γε ἐβοήθουν ἄν. (66) εἶπεν οὖν τις τῶν τὰς ἱστορίας συντεθεικότων, ὅτι δίκην τις ἔδωκεν ἐν Χαλκίδι διὰ τὸν Ἡσιόδου ψόγον ἢ τὸν Ὀμήρου; οὐδεῖς. πῶς οὖν οὐ δεινὸν τοῖς μὲν πάλαι τῶν ποιητῶν αὐτῶν λεγόντων ἀκηκοόσιν ἐξεῖναί τι καὶ ἐπιτιμῆσαι, τῶν δ' ὕστερον τοὺς οὐ χρηστόν <τι> παρ' ἐκείνοις ὀρῶντας ἢ σιγᾶν ἢ ἀπολωλέναι; (Ed. Foerster)

This exemplum contributes to the development of Libanius' argument that criticising poets is not, and never has been, against the law: indeed no historian has ever written of any punishments inflicted on those members of the audience who, during the competition in Chalcis, found fault with either poet's performance.

In this account, an epigram in which Hesiod proclaims his victory against Homer is mentioned as the source for the story of the contest: this is obviously (although the text is not quoted) the epigram allegedly inscribed on the tripod that Hesiod won at the contest and dedicated to the Muses.<sup>84</sup> The epigram gives only very basic information about the contest: the name of the two participants, the location and the winner. Accordingly, Libanius' account does not add any further details to the narrative, and different reactions of the whilst in prison, he should be forbidden to speak as an additional punishment. Translation in Russel 1996: 58-66.

---

<sup>83</sup> Cf. parr. 62-3. Translations are from Russell 1996.

<sup>84</sup> On the tripod and the epigram see Introduction on Hesiod esp. pp. 12-14.

public to the performances and to the outcome are only listed as possibilities.

It could be argued that this was because Libanius knew the story exclusively from the epigram, and was unaware of the tradition that developed around it. For we know that the epigram also had independent circulation, and was transmitted in school books.<sup>85</sup> It may be in a similar context that Libanius learned of the story of the contest between Homer and Hesiod. However, Libanius' decision to mention the epigram as a source for the story may also reflect the fact that he found in this text and in its scarcity of detail a particularly suitable rhetorical ally: it helps him to build up his argument in the way that best suits him.

At the beginning of the passage he presents the different ways in which Hesiod could have been proclaimed the winner. Hesiod was supported either by everyone, or by the majority of the people. The first option, however, implies that everyone thought that Homer talked nonsense. Therefore, some must have favoured Hesiod and some Homer, and conversely 'both poets found some who did not praise them'. Consequently, criticising the poets must be an ancient habit and must have happened on that occasion already. Since there is no evidence that this was considered a crime at that time, there is no reason why it should be so for Socrates. As the example goes, this is the only acceptable conclusion, and it is reached through a purposeful selection of the material circulating about the story of the contest of Homer and Hesiod.

Proclus, Life of Homer 6.

The story of the contest also features in some biographical sources, including a Life of Homer by Proclus (fifth century AD), which was part of the first book of his Chrestomathy.<sup>86</sup> Proclus' version of the life of Homer, based on 'extensive

---

<sup>85</sup> See AP 7.53 and P.Freib. 1.1b (on which see pp. 83-6).

<sup>86</sup> The Chrestomathy is now lost, but its contents can be in part reconstructed thanks to Photius' summary (Bibliotheca cod. 239) and to a few manuscripts transmitting the Life of Homer and a summary of the Epic Cycle. Photius informs us that the Chrestomathy also included a Life of research' that he carried out for his pupils,<sup>87</sup> is particularly encomiastic and often refutes some of the most well known features of the Homeric biographical tradition. The poet, for example, was not blind, nor poor, nor did he write anything that could be considered inferior to the Iliad and the Odyssey.<sup>88</sup> Similarly, Proclus maintains that Homer was never defeated by Hesiod in a poetic contest:

εἰσὶ δὲ οἵτινες ἀνεψιὸν αὐτὸν Ἡσιόδου παρέδωσαν ἀτριβεῖς ὄντες ποιήσεως· τοσοῦτον γὰρ ἀπέχουσι τοῦ γένει προσήκειν ὅσον ἢ ποιήσις διέστηκεν αὐτῶν. ἄλλως δὲ οὐδὲ τοῖς χρόνοις συνεπέβαλον ἀλλήλοις. ἄθλιοι δὲ οἱ τὸ αἰνιγμα πλάσαντες τοῦτο·

Ἡσίοδος Μούσαις Ἑλικωνίσι τόνδ' ἀνέθηκεν,

ὕμνῳ νικήσας ἐν Χαλκίδι δῖον Ὀμηρον.

ἀλλὰ γὰρ ἐπλανήθησαν ἐκ τῶν Ἡσιοδείων Ἡμερῶν· ἕτερον γὰρ τι σημαίνει. (Ed. West)

Homer's defeat does not fit the image of the great poet that Proclus is offering in his biography and, consequently, he needs to find a way to deny it. To do so, he discards the very possibility that the two poets met each other, on the grounds that they were not contemporaries. This is an interesting detail, because it helps us to set out the controversy concerning the authorship and date of the Chrestomathy.

The ancient sources unanimously attribute this work to Proclus Diadochus, the Neoplatonic philosopher who lived in the fifth century AD.<sup>89</sup>

---

Hesiod. For the manuscript tradition of Photius and the other fragments of the Chrestomathy see Severyns 1938-1963 and Ferrante 1957. For the discussion of its authorship see below.

<sup>87</sup> Par. 5: ἀλλὰ δὴ ταῦτα μὲν πολλῆς ἔχεται ζητήσεως, ἵνα δὲ μὴδὲ τούτων ἄπειρος ὑπάρχῃς, διὰ τοῦτο εἰς ταῦτα κεχώρηκα.

<sup>88</sup> For Proclus on Homer's blindness see par. 6: τυφλὸν δὲ ὅσοι τοῦτον ἀπεφάναντο αὐτοῖ μοι δοκοῦσι τὴν διάνοιαν πεπηρῶσθαι· τοσαῦτα γὰρ κατείδεν ἄνθρωπος ὅσα οὐδεὶς πώποτε. On his poverty, par. 8: τούτῳ δὲ προσυπονοητέον καὶ πλούτου πολλὴν περιουσίαν γενέσθαι· αἱ γὰρ μακραὶ ἀποδημίαι πολλῶν δέονται ἀναλωμάτων. On the attribution of works, par. 9: γέγραφε δὲ ποιήσεις δύο, Ἰλιάδα καὶ Ὀδύσειαν.

<sup>89</sup> Suda s.v. Πρόκλος ὁ Λύκιος attributes to him the Chrestomathy and commentaries on Hesiod's

But some modern scholars have attributed it to Eutychius Proclus, a grammarian of the second century AD.<sup>90</sup> Scholars who study the attribution of the Chrestomathy often overlook the Life of Homer, but its treatment of the contest story is virtually identical to that found in another work which is certainly by Proclus Diadochus: his Commentary on Works and Days.<sup>91</sup> The passage at issue is the scholium on Op. 650-62, in which Proclus reports Plutarch's denial of the story and his athetesis of the Hesiodic passage (quoted in the section on Plutarch's passages on the contest). In the scholium the discussion of the contest is linked to the analysis of the related Hesiodic passage; in the Chrestomathy too Proclus is aware that the contest tradition arose from that passage – and more specifically, so he claims, from a misinterpretation of it (ἀλλὰ γὰρ ἐπλανήθησαν ἐκ τῶν Ἡσιοδείων ἡμερῶν· ἕτερον γάρ τι σημαίνει). The contest between Homer and Hesiod, then, is denied in both texts. It seems therefore that Proclus, while writing his commentary on Works and Days, made extensive use of the commentary by his predecessor, Plutarch; from Plutarch's

---

Works and Days; the manuscript Ottobonianus gr. 58 (fifteenth c. AD) introduces Proclus' Life of Homer with the words Πρόκλου Πλατωνικοῦ διαδόχου περὶ Ὀμήρου; a scholium to Gregorius Nazianzenus' Or. 43 attributes a treatise on the Epic Cycle to Proclus Πλατωνικός.

<sup>90</sup> On Eutychius Proclus see Historia Augusta, Iul. Capit. Vit. Ant. 2 and Pollio Aemil. Tyr. 22, 13 (he was a Latin grammarian; he was advanced to a proconsulship; he was the most learned man of his time; and the author of a work about foreign countries). Welcker 1835: 3-7 was one of the first scholars to question the traditional attribution. Hillgruber 1990 proposed that the Pseudo-Plutarchean treatise De Homero derives from the Chrestomathy and dated both works to the second century AD. Kuisma 1996: 57 then denied the presence of explicit Neoplatonic features in the Chrestomathy. In defence of the traditional attribution, Ferrante 1957: 10-13 underlined that the wide range of Proclus Diadochus' cultural interests included also the study of literature. Ferrante also rightly pointed out that, according to the Historia Augusta, Eutychius Proclus was not a Greek but a Latin grammarian. More recently, Longo 1995 convincingly questioned Hillgruber's theory about the derivation of the Ps.-Plu. De Homero from the Chrestomathy.

<sup>91</sup> For the attribution of the Commentary to Proclus Diadochus see Salemi 1951, Ferrante 1957: 11, Pertusi 1955, Marzillo 2010.

work he learned that the contest never happened, and exported this idea to another work, his Chrestomathy.<sup>92</sup> There is, however, a difference between Plutarch and Proclus: Plutarch athetises the Hesiodic passage; Proclus, as the Life shows, suggests that it needs to be reinterpreted. Unfortunately, the scholium breaks off before giving Proclus' interpretation as opposed to Plutarch's. Lamberton identifies another point of strong agreement between this Life and Proclus Diadochus' Commentary on Plato's Republic.<sup>93</sup> In his commentary (1.174.4-5), Proclus claims that the blindness of Homer was a metaphor for his inner vision. In the Life (par. 6 quoted above), Proclus says that Homer was not blind, but able to see more clearly than any man ever could: those who invented this story were in fact mentally blind. In both passages, the ability to see to which Proclus refers is not simply physical one. Furthermore, Homer in the Life is said to be κοσμοπολίτης, a citizen of the world. This word is remarkably rare in extant Greek texts, but belongs to philosophical discourse.<sup>94</sup> This again supports the attribution of the Chrestomathy to Proclus Diadochus.

John Tzetzes.

John Tzetzes (twelfth century AD) makes extensive use of the story of the poetic competition between Homer and Hesiod in his works. He mentions it several times in his Commentary on Hesiod's Works and Days (268ter, 274bis, 280bis, 652); in his Life of Hesiod, prolegomenon to his Commentary (123-42 Colonna); and in the Allegories of the Iliad (89-92 Boissonade). Tzetzes denies that the contest ever took place, on the grounds that the two poets were not contemporaries. As a commentator on Hesiod's Works and Days, when developing his approach to

---

<sup>92</sup> The 'extensive research' that Proclus claims to have made may have also included a study of Plutarchean commentary. A later commentator on Works and Days, John Tzetzes, will in turn take this idea from the exegetic tradition built up by Plutarch and Proclus and support it in his own commentary and in other works. See the section on Tzetzes below.

<sup>93</sup> Lamberton 1986: 177-8.

<sup>94</sup> e.g. D. L. 6.63.3.

this episode, he was certainly influenced by, and building on, the earlier exegetic tradition, that is Plutarch's and Proclus' commentaries, where the contest tradition was already denied. Tzetzes' comment on Op. 652 is particularly informative in this respect:

(652.) ΑΜΦΙΔΑΜΑΝΤΟΣ. Οὗτος ὁ Ἀμφιδάμας Εὐβοίας ὢν βασιλεὺς πρὸς Ἐρετριέας ναυμαχῶν ἀνηρέθη· καὶ οἱ παῖδες αὐτοῦ ἐπ' αὐτῷ προεκήρυξαν ἀγῶνας παντοίους, καὶ ἄθλα, ὅπερ τὸ ΠΡΟΠΕΦΡΑΔΜΕΝΑ δηλοῖ, ἡγουν προκεκηρυγμένα. Οὗ νικήσας Ἡσίοδος, ὡς ληροῦσι, τὸν ἡμίθεον Ὅμηρον, τρίποδα ἔλαβε, καὶ ταῖς Ἑλικωνίτισι Μούσαις ἀνέθετο, ὅπου πρῶτος ἐπαιδεύετο· ἢ καὶ κόπῳ καὶ μόχθῳ ἀνυπερβλήτῳ χρησάμενος ἐμεμαθήκει, ἅπερ μεμάθηκεν. Ὅτι δὲ ὕστερος ἦν Ἡσίοδος τοῦ παλαιοῦ Ὁμήρου, καὶ πρότερον εἰρήκειν, κἂν καὶ ὁ Ἡρόδοτος, ὁ ἐν πολλοῖς ἐμοὶ ἐλεγχθεὶς ὡς ψευδηγορῶν, ὁμοχρόνους τούτους φησί. Καὶ εἰ ὁμόχρονος ἦν Ἡσίοδος, ὁ θεῖος ἐκεῖνος ἀνὴρ ἡττήθη ἂν εὖ οἶδα, καὶ οὐκ ἐνδοιάζων φημί. Αἰεὶ γὰρ κατὰ τοῦτον

τὰ χειρίονα νικᾷ. (Ed. Gaisford)

Tzetzes' text explicitly draws from Plutarch's/Proclus' scholium on Op. 650-62. Besides the already mentioned agreement on the denial of the story, both passages give the same biographical information on Amphidamas, king of Euboea, who died in a naval battle against the Eretrians, and explain that his sons organized funeral games for him. Moreover, Hesiod's victory is mentioned and denied in the two scholia with the very same words: Plutarch, according to Proclus, says that all this information about the contest is ληρώδη, 'silly stuff'; Tzetzes claims that those who created this story ληροῦσι, 'talked nonsense'.

That Tzetzes used the earlier exegetical material is also confirmed by a comparison with other extant scholia.<sup>95</sup> A scholium to Op. 653 runs: ΤΑ ΔΕ ΠΡΟΠΕΦΡΑΔΜΕΝΑ. Τὰ ἄθλα, τῶν ἀγωνιζομένων δηλονότι, προκεκηρυγμένα ἦσαν. Tzetzes seems to insert this comment into his own work by saying: ὅπερ τὸ ΠΡΟΠΕΦΡΑΔΜΕΝΑ δηλοῖ, ἡγουν προκεκηρυγμένα. In addition, on vv. 656 and 657 we read: (656.) ΤΟΝ Τριπόδα ἐγὼ φησὶν ἀνέθηκα εἰς τὸν τόπον, ὅπου ἐποίησάν με ἐκ ποιμένος ἀοιδὸν αἱ Μοῦσαι. (657.) ΕΝΘΑ ΜΕ ΤΟ ΠΡΩΤΟΝ. Ἡ ἐν Χαλκίδι, ἢ ἐν ἄλλῳ τόπῳ, ὅπου πρῶτον ὑπήντησαν αὐτῷ αἱ Μοῦσαι. In claiming ἀνέθετο, ὅπου πρῶτος ... ἐπαιδεύετο, Tzetzes seems to have borrowed from these scholia the notion that the tripod was dedicated in the place where Hesiod was first educated as a poet by the Muses.

---

<sup>95</sup> The scholia mentioned here are fragments from ancient commentaries transmitted by the manuscripts together with fragments from Plutarch and Proclus in the scholia vetera: see Pertusi 1951 and 1955 and Marzillo 2010. It means that probably Tzetzes read Proclus' commentary in a form similar to that we know: marginal comments transmitted with the text of Hesiod drawn from different commentaries.

Tzetzes' original contribution, then, enables us to understand the reasons of his agreement with the previous commentators on the denial of the story: Homer's poetry is better than Hesiod's. He adds a witty reflection based on Il. 1.576: he claims that, had the contest ever taken place, Hesiod would have certainly defeated Homer, since Homer himself claimed that 'the worst wins'.

Other mentions of the contest in Tzetzes' commentary are always linked to his criticism of Hesiod's poetry, which often related, in turn, to Proclus' criticism.<sup>96</sup> The instance that deserves a closer look is found in the so-called Vita Hesiodi, included in the Prolegomena to this work. There are several problems related to the history of the transmission of this text, and there is a serious lack of scholarly attention to this work. All we can understand from the existing studies is that it was transmitted in forms with differing length and that the attribution is disputed, in the manuscripts, between Proclus and Tzetzes.<sup>97</sup>

---

<sup>96</sup> The most passionate comment on Homer's defeat by Tzetzes is on Op. 280bis: ὦ τῆς ἀβελτερίας! ὦ τῆς ἀνοίας! ὦ τῆς ἀπαιδευσίας! ὦ λόγου ἀρετῇ καὶ παιδείᾳ, οὐχὶ δακρύετε; καὶ σὺ δὲ ἤλιε στύγνασον τοῖς τούτων ληρήμασι, καὶ τῇ ἀβλεψίᾳ τῇ τῶν ἀνδρῶν.

<sup>97</sup> Gaisford 1823 included the same Vita Hesiodi in both Proclus' and Tzetzes' Prolegomena, without giving details on the manuscript situation. Wilamowitz 1916: 47 on this matter claims that the manuscripts provide two recensions of the text ('duas codices praebent recensiones'); Pertusi 1951 considered the attribution to Proclus in some manuscripts as arbitrary and reached the conclusion that Tzetzes was the original author of this text, which was later shortened, inserted in the manuscripts of the scholia and wrongly attributed to Proclus. Following Pertusi's

However, some considerations on this text and its relationships to other accounts of the episode (esp. Proclus and Certamen) can be made. This is the section of the text concerning the contest (123-42 Colonna):

οἱ δὲ συγχρόνους αὐτοὺς εἶναι λέγοντες ἐπὶ τῇ τελευτῇ Ἀμφιδάμαντος τοῦ βασιλέως Εὐβοίας φασὶν αὐτοὺς ἀγωνίσασθαι, καὶ νενικηκέναι Ἡσίοδον, ἀγωνοθετοῦντος καὶ κρίνοντος τὰ μέτρα Πανείδου τοῦ βασιλέως τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ Ἀμφιδάμαντος, καὶ τῶν υἱῶν Ἀμφιδάμαντος Γανύκτορος τε καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν. ἐξηρωτηκέναι γὰρ αὐτοὺς πολλὰ πρὸς ἀλλήλους φασὶ δι' ἐπῶν αὐτοσχεδίων καὶ ἀποκρίνασθαι, καὶ πᾶσι τὸν Ὅμηρον τὰ πρωτεῖα λαμβάνειν· τέλος τοῦ βασιλέως Πανείδου εἰπόντος αὐτοῖς τὰ κάλλιστα τῶν ἑαυτῶν ἐπῶν ἀναλεξαμένους εἰπεῖν, Ὅμηρος μὲν ἄρχεται λέγειν τουτὶ τὸ χωρίον ἀπὸ πολλῶν ἐπῶν ἀρξάμενος ὀπισθεν· ἀσπὶς ἄρ' ἀσπὶδ' ἔρειδε, κόρυς κόρυν, ἀνέρα δ' ἀνήρ, ψαῦον δ' ἵπποκομοὶ κόρυθες λαμπροῖσι φάλοισι νευόντων· ὥς πυκνοὶ ἐφέστασαν ἀλλήλοισι, καὶ περαιτέρω τούτων. Ἡσίοδος δὲ τοῦ·

Πληιάδων Ἀτλαγενέων ἐπιτελλομενάων

ἀπάρχεται καὶ ὁμοίως Ὀμήρῳ προβαίνει μέχρι πολλοῦ τῶν ἐπῶν. καὶ πάλιν ἐπὶ τούτοις οἱ παρεστῶτες πάντες τῶν ἐλλογίμων καὶ στρατιωτῶν τὸν Ὅμηρον ἐστεφάνουν, ὁ δὲ Πανείδης ἔκρινε νικᾶν τὸν Ἡσίοδον, ὥς εἰρήνην καὶ γεωργίαν διδάσκοντα, καὶ οὐ καθάπερ ὁ Ὅμηρος πολέμους καὶ σφάγια. ἀλλὰ ταῦτα μὲν ληρήματα τῶν νεωτέρων εἰσὶ καὶ πλάσεις τῶν πρὸς ἀλλήλους ἐρωτημάτων καὶ τῶν ἐξ Ὀμήρου παρεκβεβλημένων ἐπῶν καὶ ὑπ' ἐκείνου δηθέν ῥηθέντων. Ὅμηρος γὰρ ὁ χρυσοῦς, ὥς ἐγῶμαι, μᾶλλον δ' ἀκριβεστάτως ἐπίσταμαι, πολὺ τε παλαιότερος Ἡσιόδου ὑπῆρχε.

To start with, the version of the episode presented here is virtually identical to that in the Certamen. The story is introduced during the discussion of the chronology of the two poets; both King Panedes and the sons of Amphidamas are mentioned as the organisers of the contest; the contest itself is developed through an exchange of improvised challenges leading up to the performance of each poet's finest passages; Homer is ahead of the game but Panedes crowns Hesiod. Furthermore, there are similarities between Proclus, studies, Colonna 1953 attempted to establish the original text of Tzetzes' Vita Hesiodi. The results of these studies are also reflected in Marzillo's recent edition of Proclus' Commentary (Marzillo 2010), which does not include the Vita Hesiodi.

---

Tzetzes and the Certamen in the account of other biographical episodes too: Homer's meeting with Creophylus<sup>98</sup> and Homer's death after slipping on some mud and falling on a stone.<sup>99</sup>

As for the issue of the attribution of the Life of Hesiod, given the many points in common between Proclus' and Tzetzes' biographical narratives, and Tzetzes' extensive use of Proclus' exegetical work, it seems plausible that the confusion in the manuscripts may have arisen from the fact that two similar Lives of Hesiod existed, one by Proclus contained in the Chrestomathy (as testified by Photius) and one – which comprehensively draws on the Proclean one – by Tzetzes. The lost Life of Hesiod written by Proclus, therefore, must have been similar in contents to the extant one circulating under Tzetzes' name. Another consideration that can be made is that the Certamen appears to have many points of contact with the ancient and late antique exegetical material, and may have circulated in the same environments.

Like Proclus and Plutarch, Tzetzes uses the work he has done for the Commentary in other contexts too. In his Allegories of the Iliad (89-92 Boissonade) he claims:

Οἱ μάτην γράφειν θέλοντες ἱστορικὰ βιβλία 90 ὁμόχρονον τὸν Ὅμηρον λέγουσιν Ἡσιόδου, ἐπὶ τῷ Ἀμφιδάμαντος τάφῳ δοκιμασθέντας.
Ἀλλ'οὗτοι μὲν ἠγνόησαν εἶναι πολλοὺς Ὀμήρους.

Eustathius, Commentary on Homer's Iliad I 6.4-7.1 Van der Valk (passim).

The last witness I consider for the story of the contest of Homer and Hesiod is Eustathius' commentary on the Iliad (twelfth century AD). Eustathius inserts a mention of the contest between Homer and Hesiod in an account of the life of Homer that is part of the introduction to his Commentary. In this section, he presents Homer's poetry as a source of wisdom and knowledge, and claims that all writers receive inspiration from Homer just as all rivers receive their water from the Ocean.<sup>100</sup>

---

<sup>98</sup> Cert. 321-323; Procl. Vit. Hom. 5; Tz. Alleg. 119 ff.; Tz. H. 13. 658.

<sup>99</sup> Cert. 323-38; Procl. Vit. Hom. 5; Tz. Alleg. 129 ff.; Tz. H. 13.665-6. This account is present also in P.Mich. 2754 – for its relationship to the Certamen see pp. 70-80.

The discussion of the life of Homer is included in Eustathius's work only as a brief introduction to Homer's poetry rather than as the focus of his attention in its own right. When approaching the topic, Eustathius does not suggest that he is developing new research on it; he rather collects the results of the research which had been carried out by his predecessors and which had crystallized into traditional forms by his time. Eustathius starts with the standard remark that, despite the fundamental importance of Homer's poetry, nothing is known with certainty about his life because there is no biographical information in Homer's own works; he then says that for this reason the poet is claimed as a fellow citizen by every city:<sup>101</sup>

Ὅμηρου δὲ γένος οὐδ' αὐτὸ περιεργασόμεθα. εἴρηται γὰρ πολλοῖς ἑτέροις, ὥς οὐκ ἂν ἡμεῖς κρειπτόνως εἴπωμεν· εἰ μὴ ἄρα τοῦτο καὶ μόνον ῥητέον κατὰ τὸ ἐπιτρέχον, ὅτι ἐπικρύψας ἑαυτὸν ὁ ποιητὴς καὶ σιγήσας, ὅστις ποτὲ καὶ ὅθεν ἦν, περιμάχητος ἄλλον ἐγένετο καὶ πολύπατρις.

As in many other biographies, a list of the contender cities follows, with a few comments. After mentioning the names of poets allegedly older than Homer, the poet's blindness, change of name, and works, Eustathius comments on the tradition of the poetic competition between Homer and Hesiod:

εἰ δὲ καὶ ἤρισεν Ὅμηρος Ἡσιόδῳ τῷ Ἀσκραίῳ καὶ ἡττήθη, ὅπερ ὄκνος τοῖς Ὀμηρίδαις καὶ λέγειν, ζητητέον ἐν τοῖς εἰς τοῦτο γράψασιν, ἐν οἷς ἔκκεινται καὶ τὰ ῥήτὰ τῆς ἔριδος.

As in the case of the other biographical anecdotes, Eustathius offers but a scarce amount of detail on the story of the contest, and invites the reader to search for more information on it in other works. Similarly, he does not offer his own opinion on the episode, although his overall positive attitude towards Homer would probably suggest that, like the Homeridae, he must have hesitated to tell

---

<sup>100</sup> On this metaphor see Cesaretti 1991: 135-6; 180-1; 213-15.

<sup>101</sup> Cf. Cert. 2-4n. and 7-8n.

it. The mention of the Homeridae is interesting: it may suggest that they had an active role in the transmission, and perhaps selection, of the Homeric biographical material, or may be used by Eustathius as a general name to describe Homer's admirers, descendants, and keepers of his reputation.<sup>102</sup>

Perhaps the most interesting detail in this passage is the fact that the author encourages his readers to find information on the contest ἐν τοῖς εἰς τοῦτο γράψασιν: Eustathius elsewhere uses εἰς with the title of a work in the accusative to refer to line by line commentaries.<sup>103</sup> Here, therefore, he seems to be pointing to the existence of works on the story of the contest of Homer and Hesiod accompanied by detailed exegetical notes, arguably for use in school environments, rather than generically referring to works about that story. ἐν οἷς ἔκκεινται καὶ τὰ ῥήτᾳ τῆς ἔριδος, then, suggests that, although we only have one manuscript transmitting the Certamen and some reference to the so called finest passages in a few literary works, the verses that the two poets exchanged circulated more widely up to the Middle Ages.

---

<sup>102</sup> On the Homeridae see Cert. 13-15n.

<sup>103</sup> In Il. I 3, 34; I 46, 26; I 55, 1; I 80, 14; I 94, 22.

2. Textual tradition.

Vielleicht bringt ein neuer Papyrusfund einmal weitere Aufklärung.
Vogt 1959: 219

This chapter offers the first systematic and up-to-date analysis of all the extant manuscript witnesses for the Certamen.<sup>104</sup> The text in its entirety is transmitted only by one manuscript, Laur. Plut. 56, 1 (L). Five papyrus fragments preserve sections of texts that can be variously related to the Certamen: three of them testify to works that can be seen as the literary sources of it and are attributed to Alcidas (P.Petr. I 25 (1), P.Mich. inv. 2754, P.Ath.Soc.Pap. inv. M2); the other two transmit some of the epigrammatic material used in the Certamen (P.Freib. 1.1 b and P.Duk. inv. 665). By analysing each witness individually, the present study aims to identify the main features of the textual tradition through which the Certamen was transmitted.

From the context of transmission of the Certamen in manuscript L and some features of the papyri, it will emerge that the story of the contest between Homer and Hesiod was likely taught in schools. It was also probably used for rhetorical exercises, and thereby made its way into several literary works. The fact itself that it was considered as material of such sort indicates a somewhat innate susceptibility to adaptation, and the versions of the story which are presented in rhetorical works, analysed in the previous chapter, confirm this. By comparing the texts of the papyri with the corresponding passages of the Certamen, moreover, we can see a tendency to compress and alterate which emerges as a characteristic feature of the textual transmission of this material.

This invites reflection on the practice of textual criticism on this material. Undoubtedly the contribution of the papyri is often useful to our understanding of the text transmitted in manuscript L and vice versa; but ultimately the Certamen is the product of conscious and purposeful acts of adaptation, and contains material that is itself fluid and suitable for alterations. Each case of divergence between the textual witnesses should therefore be considered individually.

---

<sup>104</sup> Some preliminary remarks in Bassino 2012.

Note on the papyrus fragments.

After introducing the manuscript L, I introduce each papyrus fragment individually, providing general information on the fragment, a description of its contents and an outline of its contribution to the textual tradition. I then present a text of the papyrus itself. In the case of P.Petr. I 25 (1) and P.Mich. inv. 2754, I propose new editions of the text on the basis of high resolution images. In the other three cases, making a new edition was not possible or not necessary: there is no workable image of P.Ath.Soc.Pap. inv. M2 available in the public domain or for purchase; only two lines of the text of P.Freib. 1.1 b are relevant here, and they do not contain any textual problems; P.Duk. inv. 665, finally, was published in a reliable edition while this study was in progress.

The format of a line by line commentary is adopted for the first three papyri because it allows for close comparison of their texts with that of L, and detailed discussion of textual problems. The other two papyri are each given a consecutive commentary that analyses their general contribution to our knowledge of the textual transmission of the Certamen.

Manuscript

The text of the Certamen as a whole survives in a single manuscript, Laur. Plut. 56, 1 (L).<sup>105</sup> This manuscript was bought and brought from Crete to Florence in 1492 by Janus Lascaris on behalf of Lorenzo de' Medici, and then became part of the Medicean Library. Among the documents that attest the purchase of manuscripts by Lascaris one mentions a manuscript containing Polienus de stratagematibus et Polux in uno volumine: this volume is to be identified with L.<sup>106</sup> One of its readers seems to have been Angelo Poliziano.<sup>107</sup> It was also used by Giovanni Pico della Mirandola.<sup>108</sup> It was copied by Henricus Stephanus in the first half of the sixteenth century (Leid. Voss. Gr. qu. 18 = S) and in 1573 he published much material from L in a miscellaneous book (E). This was also the editio princeps of the Certamen.<sup>109</sup>

---

<sup>105</sup> URL: <http://opac.bml.firenze.sbn.it/Manuscript.htm?Segnatura=Plut.56.1>. Fryde 1996 is a recent and exhaustive summary of the known information about the manuscript; see esp. p. 784, with further literature. See also Daneloni and Martinelli 1994: 311-12. Images are available at the URL above.

L is a paper codex made up of 292 pages, written by several hands and dated to the twelfth to fourteenth century AD.<sup>110</sup> The codex contains mainly

---

<sup>106</sup> Piccolomini 1874 publishes the documents which attest Lascaris' trips to Greece. See also Desmed 1974: 316 n. 20, Fryde 1983: 223 n. 11 and 1996: 127, Rubinstein 1990: 20 n. 38, Gentile 1997: 490 and n. 85, Cameron 2004: 336, Daneloni 2005: 185.

<sup>107</sup> The manuscript even seems to have been found in Poliziano's scriptorium after his death (Daneloni-Martinelli 1994: 312). Poliziano also mentions the story of the contest between Homer and Hesiod in his Silvae (Nutricia, 388-90) published in 1486, but he cannot have been influenced by the Certamen which reached Florence only in 1492. According to Daneloni and Martinelli (ibid.) and Fryde 1996: 573 and 729-30, Poliziano was interested in the manuscript mainly because of the Paradoxographus Florentinus. For Poliziano and the manuscript's text of Pollux see Daneloni 2005: 185-9. For Poliziano and this manuscript more generally, see also Desmed 1974: 316 n. 20, Bausi 1996: 203, Harsting 2001: 16 n. 17.

<sup>108</sup> Gentile 1994: 490 and n. 85.

<sup>109</sup> The full title of the publication is Homeri et Hesiodi Certamen. Matronis et aliorum parodiae. Homericorum heroum epitaphia. Digital images of the book are available at: http://www.e-rara.ch/gep\_g/content/pageview/1777967.

<sup>110</sup> The different parts seem to belong to different periods: Canart 2002: 41, Cameron 2004: 336. The website of the Biblioteca Laurenziana dates the whole manuscript to 1301-1400 AD: see <http://teca.bmlonline.it/TecaRicerca/showMag.jsp?RisIdr=TECA0000647661>. Russell and Wilson 1981: xli have dated the hand that copied Menander's works to the second half of the 12th century. The same period has been proposed by Rubinstein 1990: 20 n. 38, Fryde 1996: 127, 382, 409 n. 384. 13th-14th c.: Giannini 1965: 315, Desmed 1974: 316 n. 20, Daneloni and Martinelli 1994: 311-12. 14th c.: Allen 1912: 188, Rzach 1913: 234, Colonna 1959: 74.

rhetorical works and seems to have been used as a school book.<sup>111</sup> It has lost its opening pages and the title of the first work is missing. The Certamen is copied at 15v-19r, by the first identifiable hand of the book. It belongs to a group of pages running from 1-83v. These pages constitute the first of four codicological units which make up the book.<sup>112</sup> This is a detailed list of the contents of the first section of the manuscript:

1r: excerpts from the works of Menander Rhetor.

11r: a series of anonymous works among which the Certamen:

11r: Κρηναὶ καὶ λίμναι καὶ πηγαὶ καὶ ποταμοὶ ὅσοι θαυμάσιά τινα ἔχουσι. This is a catalogue of springs, lakes and rivers which are said to be marvellous by ancient authors. Sources are often quoted. It ends with a treatise about the flooding of the Nile. The work is also known as the Paradoxographus Florentinus.

13r: Γυναῖκες ἐν πολεμικοῖς συνεταὶ καὶ ἀνδρεῖαι. This text, also known under the title De Mulieribus, contains short exempla of women who distinguished themselves for courage and ability in war. Here too, sources are often quoted.

14v: Τίνες οἴκοι ἀνάστατοι διὰ γυναῖκας ἐγένοντο. List of families ruined by a woman; the name of the family is usually accompanied by the name of the woman who destroyed it. This and the remaining texts listed below contained in 14v-15v are also known as Anonymus Florentinus.

14v: Φιλᾶδελφοί. List of brothers who loved each other.

14v: Φιλέταιροι. List of friends who loved each other.

15r: short notice on Kleobis and Biton, with no title. The pair seems to be cited as an example of people who loved their mother, which would not be out of place after examples of brothers and friends who loved each other. For this reason Westermann supplied the title Φιλομήτορες.<sup>113</sup>

---

<sup>111</sup> Cavallo 2000: 231.

<sup>112</sup> Daneloni and Martinelli 1994: 311.

15r: a text telling the story of the Phrygian Lityerses. Without title in the manuscript, Westermann proposed Ἀσεβεῖς, as Lityerses seems to be an exemplum of impiety.<sup>114</sup> The passage includes a quotation from Daphnis, a lost drama by Sositheus.<sup>115</sup>

15r: a list of people struck by thunderbolts. Included under the heading Ἀσεβεῖς in early editions, it was first distinguished from the previous list of ‘impious people’ by Wilamowitz, who suggested the title Κεραυνωθέντες.<sup>116</sup>

15r: a collection of mythical exempla of metamorphoses brought about by the will of some gods or goddesses. Again there is no title in the manuscript; Westermann proposed Μεταμορφωθέντες.<sup>117</sup>

15v: the stories of Leucone, wife of Cyanippus, and Polyhymnus of Argos. L gives no title.<sup>118</sup>

15v: Περὶ Ὀμήρου καὶ Ἡσιόδου καὶ τοῦ γένους καὶ ἀγῶνος αὐτῶν: this is our Certamen.

19v: Ποῦ ἕκαστος τῶν Ἑλλήνων τέθραπται καὶ τί ἐπιγέγραπται ἐπὶ τῷ τάφῳ. A collection of epigrams inscribed on the tombstones of some Greek heroes.

---

<sup>113</sup> Westermann 1843: 346. The suggestion is accepted by Cameron 2004: 338.

<sup>114</sup> Ibid. (see note above).

<sup>115</sup> TrGF 99 F 2-3.

<sup>116</sup> Wilamowitz 1875: 181 n. 4. This suggestion too is accepted by Cameron 2004: 338.

<sup>117</sup> Westermann 1843: 346. See also Cameron 2004: 338.

<sup>118</sup> Early editions of the texts that precede the Certamen in L (except for Menander) are Heeren 1789, Westermann 1839: 213-23 and 1843: 345-8. Landi 1895 provided a new transcription of these texts on the basis of L. For more recent work on the Paradoxographus Florentinus see Öhler 1913 and esp. Giannini 1965: 315-29; on the De Mulieribus see Gera 1997 and also Brodersen 2010; on the Anonymus Florentinus see Cameron 2004: 240-2, 245, 286-303; with new edition of the text at 335-9. L was the antigraph for the other three main manuscripts transmitting these texts, two of which were copied by Michael Apostoles in Crete: Öhler 1913: 28-33, Dain 1950: 425-39, Gera 1997: 5-6, Cameron 2004: 335-6.

20v: four orations by Theophylact of Bulgaria.

43r: Polemo's epitaph for Callimachus and Cynaegirus.

52r: extracts from a commentary on Hermogenes' rhetorical writings by Gregory of Corinth.

82r: Hypotheseis to seven of Demosthenes' orations.

The rest of the manuscript is written by other hands. It contains:

83v: a list of Demosthenes' orations.

84r: books 5-10 of Pollux's Onomasticon.

163r: an anonymous fragment on geometry.

165v: Polyaeus's Stratagemas.

284r: another anonymous fragment, on the origin of dreams, capped by an investigation of the winds.<sup>119</sup>

As we have seen, L was a school book which in its first section contains, after excerpts from Menander's rhetorical works, a series of anonymous texts including the Certamen. These texts are mainly lists with little or no narrative content: they give several examples of marvellous springs, lakes and rivers; courageous women; families ruined by women; and so on. I now offer an analysis of the context of transmission of the Certamen: by taking into account the peculiarities of the texts transmitted alongside the Certamen, it is possible to shed light on the nature and use of our text too. What will emerge from this analysis is that the very context of transmission suggests that the Certamen was, like the other texts that accompany it, unlikely to be protected by a desire to preserve one authentic version; the scribes and readers of L clearly envisaged adaptation to specific rhetorical aims and different narrative contexts. This may be due ultimately to the fact that our text originated, and was used, in a school environment, as a didactic piece or a rhetorical exercise. Moreover, we may speculate that the very nature of the biographical material made the text inherently adaptable to new contexts and purposes. The contribution of the papyrus witnesses will confirm these hypotheses.

---

<sup>119</sup> The content of the manuscript is also listed in Bandini 1768 II: 289-94, Daneloni-Martinelli 1994: 311-12, Cameron 2004: 335-6.

The nature and purpose of De Mulieribus and the Anonymus Florentinus have recently received close attention.<sup>120</sup> It is therefore useful to start from these works to understand the editorial plan behind the section of the manuscript that contains the Certamen. Both are sub-literary works: they were not meant to have a literary integrity of their own, but rather draw on existing literary texts. Their lack of literary ambition can be seen in a tendency to employ simple sentences and a very plain style. More specifically, Gera points out with reference to De Mulieribus that in this text the sentences are usually short, with few subordinate clauses or participles.<sup>121</sup> The exempla given in this work are all basically summaries, or brief encyclopaedic notices, whose contents turn out to be less picturesque than their literary sources were, or were supposed to be. Similar points apply to the Anonymus Florentinus: Cameron remarks that the list of metamorphoses goes back to an earlier and fuller text, either a dictionary or a series of narratives.<sup>122</sup> We are therefore presented with texts that are collected from fuller sources, selected and then elaborated. These texts may have been used for rhetorical exercises, and may be defined as collections of ‘memorable precedents to be quoted or copied when occasion arises’:<sup>123</sup> i.e., they provide the reader with the necessary material to construct his arguments when he needs exempla of fraternal love, courageous women etc.<sup>124</sup>

---

<sup>120</sup> Gera 1997, Cameron 2004.

<sup>121</sup> Gera 1997: 26-8.

<sup>122</sup> Cameron 2004: 287.

<sup>123</sup> This expression is borrowed from Momigliano 1993: 72.

<sup>124</sup> Practical examples of how this might have worked are provided by Cameron 2004: 245, who compares the list of examples of families ruined by women to a similar list found in a novel, and argues that the source for that literary work must have been somewhat similar to what we find in the Anonymus Florentinus. Later (pp. 286-303) he suggests that the collection of metamorphoses goes back to the same source as Ovid’s Metamorphoses.

The Certamen shares some of the characteristics of these other texts. Already at a first glance, the dry style of its prose signals the same pronounced tendency toward concision. This is particularly evident in the agonistic section, where there is little or no description of how the competition unfolds, besides the mere exchange of verses. The verses themselves are only rarely attributed to either interlocutor. At the beginning of the section we learn that Hesiod asks the questions and Homer replies to each of them (72-4). After that, only a few words indicate changes of speaker (77, 80, 83). A similar introduction is given to another section of the contest, that containing the ‘ambivalent proposition’ (102-37), and the verses that follow are not attributed explicitly to either poet.<sup>125</sup> The same concise approach is also evident in the second last section of the contest (esp. 161-75). Some of the papyri studied in the next pages show a more complex and ornate text,<sup>126</sup> suggesting that the author of the Certamen adopted a similar attitude towards his sources to that of the De Mulieribus, the Anonymus Florentinus and the other texts in this part of L: they all involve simplification, abridgment, and adaptation. The Certamen was copied among texts that were not ‘sacrosanct literary entities’<sup>127</sup> and appears not to have been one itself.

---

<sup>125</sup> Cert. 103-6: καὶ πλείονας στίχους λέγων ἡξίου καθ’ ἓνα ἕκαστον συμφώνως ἀποκρίνασθαι τὸν Ὅμηρον. ἔστιν οὖν ὁ μὲν πρῶτος Ἡσιόδου, ὁ δὲ ἑξῆς Ὀμήρου, ἐνίοτε δὲ καὶ διὰ δύο στίχων τὴν ἐπερώτησιν ποιουμένου τοῦ Ἡσιόδου. This comment is not only short but also very vague; in fact it creates problems of attribution rather than solving them. See for example Cert. 133-7n.

<sup>126</sup> Examples of this practise occur in several of the papyri and will be described each time ad loc. As a general guideline, here it suffices to say that P.Petr. I 25 gives the longer descriptions of the change of interlocutors during the very first exchanges of challenge and response; P.Mich. inv. 2754 gives a text on the death of Homer of which the corresponding lines on the manuscript appear as a summary.

<sup>127</sup> Cf. West 1973: 16.

Papyri

P.Petr. I 25 (1) (= P.Lond.Lit. 191)

Catalogues = Brit. Lib. 500; MP<sup>3</sup> 0077; LDAB 178.

Editions and critical studies mentioned in the apparatus = Mahaffy 1891, Allen 1912, Rzach 1913, Wilamowitz 1916, Milne 1927, Colonna 1959, Avezzi 1982, Cavallo-Maehler 2008.

P.Petr. I 25 (1) contains, after a few introductory words, an account of the first stages of the poetic competition between Homer and Hesiod: it transmits a text that closely resembles Cert. 69-102.<sup>128</sup> This papyrus was discovered in Gurob (Fayyum, Egypt) and comes from the cartonnage of a mummy. It was first published by Mahaffy in 1891 and acquired by the British Library, where it is now, in 1895. It was originally part of a papyrus roll and transmits on the recto forty-eight lines of text on two columns. It is unanimously dated on palaeographic grounds to the second half of the third century BC.<sup>129</sup>

This papyrus shows that a text similar to the Certamen was circulating at least as early as in the third century BC. It also confirms that Panedes was included in the narrative among the judges already in very early stages of the tradition,<sup>130</sup> and features the same exchange of verses that we find also in the Certamen. Furthermore, it includes the couplet quoted by Stobaeus as coming

---

<sup>128</sup> The two texts do not correspond precisely: the papyrus text begins with the phrase τὸ]ν, τρόπ[ον τοῦτον and then mentions the judges and king Panedes; in the Certamen, the order is reversed: first the judges and the king are introduced (68-70) and then the contest starts (72).

<sup>129</sup> Information on the papyrus is available on the online catalogues MP<sup>3</sup> (0077) and LDAB (178); first published in Mahaffy 1891: 70-3; see also Milne 1927: 157, Cavallo and Maehler 2008: 59, 62 (nr 30); for a palaeographical analysis see also Cavallo and Maehler 2008: 1-26, esp. 9, 14, 19. Image of the papyrus in Mahaffy 1891 and Cavallo and Maehler 2008: 59.

<sup>130</sup> Heldmann 1982: 45-53 suggests that the presence of king Panedes in the Certamen is an addition from the second century AD (see also p. 31) but the presence of the king's name at l. 4 in the papyrus, underestimated by Heldmann because the text does not read exactly as in L, clearly proves this suggestion wrong.

from Alcidas' Musaion on the basis of which Nietzsche had proposed Alcidas as one of the sources for the Certamen.<sup>131</sup> Accordingly, the papyrus has been attributed to Alcidas, thus becoming the earliest extant piece of evidence for the literary sources used by the author of the Certamen.

The papyrus confirms what I have argued above about the nature of the text as preserved in L: it shows that the short and cursory sentences of the manuscript version are indeed the product of a process of abbreviation and re-elaboration of a fuller and more sophisticated text found in a literary source. The passages indicating changes of speaker show that the papyrus text pays more attention to literary form than the Certamen, where we are often left with the sole name of the new speaker or little more than that. The papyrus also shows that the source was treated quite freely and was subjected to a process of adaptation: for example, we find changes to the word order and different syntactical structures. There are variations in the hexameters too: evidently, this hexametric material was also malleable. Some of the verses are reported in, or quoted from, other literary works: in these cases, too, comparison with L reveals a tendency toward textual variation.

TEXT<sup>132</sup>

Col. I

1 τὸ]ν τροπ[ὸν τοῦτον·
τοῦ δὲ ἀγῶν]ος ἀπάντων

<sup>131</sup> See Cert. 78-9n.

<sup>132</sup> This edition is based on a digital image of the papyrus provided by the British Library. Hexameter lines have been supplemented on the basis of L: this aims at giving a readable text (Allen's and others' choice to leave most lines unsupplemented ultimately limits the utility of the text) but the possibility that the papyrus contained different readings needs to be borne in mind. The apparatus is divided into two registers: the first collects sources that transmit some of the verses included in the Certamen and notes variants between them, the papyrus (Π) and the manuscript (L); the second collects modern editorial interventions (relevant differences in reading, supplements) and registers peculiarities of the papyrus text (e.g. omissions, script above the line).

]των κριτῶν
 Π]ανήδου προε-5 εἰς τὸ μέσον] παρελθόντα φασὶν μὲν τὸν] Ἡσίοδον ἐρωτῆσαι τούσδε τοὺς στίχους]· υἱὲ Μέλητος Ὅμηρε θεῶν ἀ]πὸ μήδεα εἰδῶς, εἶπ' ἄγε μοι πάμπρω]τα, τί 10 φέρτατόν ἐστι βροτοῖσι]ν; τὸν δ' Ὅμηρον ἀ]ποκρίνασθαι τάδε τὰ ἔ]πη· ἀρ-χὴν μὲν μὴ φῦναι ἐ]πιχθονίοισι-ν ἄριστον, φύντα δ' ὅ]πως ὤκισ-15 τα πύλας Αἶδαο περῆσ]αι. ἐπιβαλόμενος δ' ὁ Ἡσίοδ]ος ἐρωτᾷ τὸ δεύτερον· εἶπ' ἄγε μοι καὶ το]ῦτο θεοῖς ἐπιείκελ' Ὅμηρε, τί θν]ητοῖς κάλλιστον οἶεαι ἐν φρεσὶν εἶ]ναι; ὁ δ' Ὅμη-20 ρος ἀποκρίνεται τοὺς] στίχους
 [τούσδε· ὁππότ' ἂν εὐφροσύνη μὲν] [ἔχηι κατὰ δῆμον ἅπαντα, δα]ιτυμόνες δ' ἀνὰ δώματ' ἀκουάζ]ων[τ]αι 23b [ἀοιδοῦ ἤμενοι ἐξείης, παρὰ δὲ πλή-]

12-15 Thgn. 425 + 427, Stob. 4.52.22 21-8 Od. 6-11

4 π]ανηδου Π Πανοίδης L 14 ὅπως Π Thgn. Stob. ὅμως L 18-19 κάλ- /
 [λιστον] Π ἄριστον L

1-7 τὸν] τρό[πον / τοῦτον φασὶν] ἀπάντων / κρατῆσαι] τῶν κριτῶν / ἐν ἀγῶνι, τοῦ Π]ανήδου προε- / στηκότος·] παρελθόν- / τα γὰρ τὸν] Ἡσίοδον ἐρω- / τῆσαι τὸν Ὅμηρον οὐτ]ως· υἱὲ Colonna τοῦ δὲ ἀγῶνος ἀπάντων τῶν ἐπισήμων ὄντων κριτῶν τῶν Χαλκιδέων μετὰ Π]ανήδου, πρὸς τοὺς κριτὰς πρότερον παρελθόντα φασὶν τὸν Ἡσίοδον ἐρωτῆσαι τοὺς στίχους τούσδε Avezzù 4-5 π]ανηδου προε / [... Milne Allen Rzach προε / [στηκοτος Mahaffy προς / [... Wilamowitz 6-7 ἐρω- / [τῆσαι Wilamowitz ερω- / [ταιν κατα τοιαδε Mahaffy Rzach Allen 8 απο] Mahaffy Allen Rzach ἀπ]ὸ Wilamowitz 11 δ' Ὅμηρον Mahaffy δὲ Ὅμηρον Wilamowitz δὲ Ὅμηρον καλῶς Colonna 11-12
 ?σοιπ / ...] η αρ Mahaffy σοιπ / ...επ]η αρ[χην Allen σοιπ / ...επ]η αρ[ Rzach ἀποκρί- / νασθαι τοῦτον τὸν τρό[πον Milne Colonna 14 ἄριστον: φέριστον Wilamowitz Avezzù 15-16 ἐπιβα- / λομενος δ ο ησιοδ]ος Allen Rzach ἐπιβα- / λων δὲ Ἡσίοδ]ος Wilamowitz Colonna (δ' ὁ Colonna) Avezzù 17 δεύτερον Wilamowitz Colonna Avezzù δε Rzach; το]υτο θε[οις Allen 19-21 ὁ δ' Ὅμη- / ρος ἀποκρίνεται τοὺς] στίχους / [τούσδε Wilamowitz Colonna Avezzù 22 υ.
 Mahaffy δαιτ]υ[μονες δ Allen Rzach δαιτ]ύ- Wilamowitz Colonna 23b om. Π

Col. II

- 25 θ[ωσι τράπεζαι σίτου καὶ κρειῶν, μέ-25 θυ δ' ἐ[κ κρητῆρος ἀφύσσων] οἶν[οχόος φορέη[σι κ]αὶ ἐγχε[ίη] δεπάεσσιν τοῦτο <τί> μοι κάλλιστ[ον ἐνὶ φρεσὶ φαίνεται εἶναι. ῥηθέν[των δὲ καὶ τούτων τῶν ἐπῶν [οὕτω σφοδρῶς 30 φασὶν θαυμασθῆν[αι τοὺς στίχου]ς' ὑπὸ τῶν Ἑλλήν[ων ὥστε χρυ-σοῦς αὐτοὺς προσα[γορεύσαντες πρὸ τῶν δείπνων καὶ [τῶν σπον-δῶν προκατεύχοντα]ι πάντες.
 35 ἀχθεσθεὶς δὲ ὁ Ἡσίοδος ε[ ἐπὶ τὴν ἀπορίαν τῆς ἀ[ποκρίσεως ὥρμησεν καὶ λέγει τ[οὺς στίχους τούσδε· Μοῦσ' ἄγε μοι τ[ὰ τ' ἐόντα τὰ τ' ἐσσόμενα πρὸ τ' ἐ[όντα 40 τῶν μὲν μηθὲν αἰδ[ε], σὺ δ' ἄλλης μνῆσαι αἰοιδῆς. ὁ δ' Ὅμηρος βουλόμενος λῦσαι τὴν ἀπο[ρίαν τῆς ἐρωτήσεως ἀποφθ[έγγεται τοὺς στίχους τούσδε· [οὐδέ ποτ' ἀμφὶ 45 Διὸς τύμβον κὰν[αχήποδες ἵπποι ἄρμα[τα συντρίψουσιν ἐρίζοντες [περὶ νίχης. καλῶς δὲ τοῦ Ὀμήρου]

44-7 Plu. Conv. Sept. Sap. 154a

27-8 φαί-] / νεται Π εἶδεται L Od. 30-1 [τοὺς στί- / ]χου]ς' Π τὰ ἔπη L 40 μηθὲν Π μηδὲν L 45 τύμβον Π τύμβω L Plu. 46-7 ἐρίζοντες Π L ἐπειγόμενοι Plu.

25 δ' ἐ[κ κρ]ητῆρ[ος Colonna 27 <τί> om. Π 27-8 φαί-] / νεται Wilamowitz
 Colonna εἶδ-] / εται Allen Rzach φαίν-] / εται Mahaffy 28 δὲ καὶ Wilamowitz 32 προσα[γορεύσαντες Rzach προσα[γορευουσι και ετι Mahaffy προσα[γορευθῆναι Allen προσα[γορεύοντες Wilamowitz Colonna Avezzù 35-6 ε[ ? / πι τὴν ἀπορίαν τῆς [ερωτήσεως Mahaffy Allen Rzach ἐ[πὶ τούτοις ἐ- / πὶ ... ἀ[ποκρίσεως Wilamowitz ἐ- / πὶ ἀ[ποκρίσεως Colonna ἐπὶ τῇ Ὀμήρου εὐημερία Avezzù 38 Μοῦσ' ἄγε Wilamowitz Avezzù μουσα γε Mahaffy Allen Rzach Colonna Cavallo-Maehler 43 ἀποφθ[έγγεται Wilamowitz Colonna
 Avezzù ἀποφε[υγείν προφέρει Mahaffy ἀποφε[ τους] Allen Rzach ἀποφε Cavallo-Maehler 45 δυος Π 46 ποι ἀρμα[τα ἐρι] Allen 47-8 Καλῶς δὲ τοῦ] /

Ὅμηρου Wilamowitz Colonna καλως δε] / ομηρου Mahaffy ] / ομηρου Allen Rzach Wilamowitz Colonna 48 [καὶ ἐν τούτοις Colonna [καὶ ἐν τούτοις ἀπαντήσαντος Avezzi.

COMMENTARY

1-6. These lines are in a very poor state of preservation but even from the few visible words the papyrus text appears quite different from that in L. The first line might be the end of an introductory statement to the effect that Hesiod won, or that the contest went, 'in the following manner'. In the Certamen there is a parallel phrase (71-2: νικῆσαί φασι τὸν Ἡσίοδον τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον), but it comes after the presentation of Panoides (as his name is spelled in L) and the other judges (68-70). The order in the papyrus seems to be reversed, as Panedes and the other judges make their appearance only at 3-4. The syntax seems different too, as the three words in the genitive ἀπαντων, κριτων and Πανηδου suggest the presence of a genitive absolute (as opposed to Cert. 68-70: τοῦ δὲ ἀγῶνος ἄλλοι τέ τινες τῶν ἐπισήμων Χαλκιδέων ἐκαθέζοντο κριταὶ καὶ μετ' αὐτῶν Πανοίδης, ἀδελφὸς ὢν τοῦ τετελευτηκότος). Colonna suggested to read τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον φασὶν ἀπάντων κρατῆσαι τῶν κριτῶν ἐν ἀγῶνι ('it is said that he won the support of all the judges in the contest in the following way') τοῦ Πανήδου προεστηκότος ('Panedes being at their head'). But he based the supplement ἀπάντων κρατῆσαι τῶν κριτῶν on the passage about the contest from Themistius' Oration 30, where Hesiod πᾶσι τοῖς κριταῖς κρατεῖ ('won the support of all the judges'), and that is a different version of the story that fits specific purposes (see Introduction, pp. 38-41).

2-4. In the papyrus the contest seems to be judged by all the Chalcideans ('all...judges'), while in the Certamen we have only 'some' of them (68-9: ἄλλοι τέ τινες τῶν ἐπισήμων Χαλκιδέων).

2. τοῦ δὲ ἀγῶνος]ς: a fairly clear trace of  $\varsigma$  can be read and this gives some support to Avezzi's τοῦ δὲ ἀγῶνος.

4. Πανήδου: the papyrus transmits the name of the king in the form Πανήδης. Editors of the Certamen have emended L's form Πανοίδης on the basis of the papyrus text, but this is questionable: see Cert. 69n.

5. [εἰς τὸ μέσον]: cf. Cert. 72, προελθόντα γὰρ εἰς τὸ μέσον: the phrase εἰς τὸ μέσον may well have been present in Alcidas' version of the story, see Cert. 72-4n.

5-6. παρελθόν- / [τα: more representative of Classical Athenian idiom than the Certamen's προελθόντα, see Biles 2011: 48.

6-7. φασὶν ... στίχου]ς: before introducing Hesiod's question, the Certamen (72-4) adds a sentence that finds no correspondence in the papyrus. It explains how the contest will develop: πυνθάνεσθαι τοῦ Ὀμήρου καθ' ἕνα καὶ ἕνα, τὸν δὲ Ὀμηρον ἀποκρίνασθαι. The expansion is merely apparent: by giving this information at the beginning of the contest, L can be much more concise in its handling of individual speech introductions. A first example of this occurs in Cert. 74, where L has φησὶν οὖν Ἡσίοδος as against the papyrus' more expansive φασὶν μὲν τὸν Ἡσίοδον ἐρωτῆσαι τούσδε τοὺς στίχους].

7-10. υἱὲ ... βροτοῖσιν: the first question seems to be the same as in the Certamen (75-6), but it is not possible to verify whether the papyrus transmitted exactly the same text as in L or a slightly different one, as in some of the subsequent lines.

10-12. τὸν ... ἔπειτα: the introduction to Homer's answer is again more elaborate than in the Certamen (77: Ὀμηρος). At the end of the line, there are traces which seem to be compatible with the letters ΠΟΚΡΙ, and could be part of the verb ἀποκρίνασθαι sometimes used in the Certamen too to introduce Homer's answers (Cert. 104, 142). The tentative identification of the traces at l. 11 with ΣΟΠ, proposed by Mahaffy and accepted by some early editors, was doubted already by Wilamowitz (see his apparatus). Only Colonna, on the basis of Milne's reading, proposes the supplement ἀποκρίνασθαι, but his reading of the rest of the line as τοῦτον τὸν τρό]πον cannot be correct: the letters AP indicating the beginning of the second question are at the end of l. 12 rather than at the beginning of l. 13, as he suggests; before them, H is visible, possibly following Π, which may lead us to supplement ἔ]πη, and hence the phrase ἀποκρίνασθαι [...] τάδε τὰ ἔπη.

12-15. ἀρ / [χῆν] ... περῆσ]αι: this is the first case in the hexameter verses where the Certamen diverges from the text of the papyrus. At l. 14, where the papyrus and all the other witnesses transmit ὅπως, L reads ὁμως; both variants are acceptable.

15-17. ἐπιβα / [λόμενος] ... [δεύτερον]: Hesiod asks the second question; the corresponding passage is Cert. 80: Ἡσίοδος τὸ δεύτερον. As previous editors suggest, τὸ δεύτερον seems an adequate supplement to fill the lacuna at the beginning of l. 17. If the reconstruction of ἐπιβαλόμενος δ' ὁ Ἡσίοδος ἐρωτᾷ τὸ δεύτερον is correct, the Certamen's τὸ δεύτερον appears as a shortened version of the papyrus text.

17-19. [εἶπ' ἄγε] ... εἶναι: a difference between the papyrus and the manuscript is clearly visible: at the end of l. 18 the letters ΚΑΛ lead us to supplement κάλλιστον, whereas Cert. 82 reads ἄριστον. In this case the papyrus helps understand what seems to be a problematic passage of the manuscript text: in the papyrus text the second exchange of verses presents a question and an answer which are both about the κάλλιστον for men (ll. 18-9 and 27); in the corresponding sequence in the Certamen Hesiod asks what is the ἄριστον (82), which however Homer has already defined in his previous answer (78), and Homer replies by defining the κάλλιστον (89). An emendation of the manuscript on the basis of the papyrus text allows to have in the Certamen too an exchange on the 'best' and one on the 'finest' thing. In the Certamen, the reading ἄριστον may be due to the influence of the same word at l. 78 (in Homer's first answer). See also Cert. 82n.

19-21. ὁ δ' ... [τούσδε]: these lines introducing Homer's answer are absent from the Certamen where we only read ὁ δέ (83). The supplements proposed by Wilamowitz and Colonna, although tentative, seem compatible with the lacuna and may give a sense of what was written on the papyrus.

21-8. [ὁππότ'] ... εἶναι: the verses of Homer's response are a passage from the Odyssey (9.6-11). The few visible traces on the papyrus in these lines between the end of the first column and the beginning of the second confirm that Homer is performing the same passage as in the Certamen (84-9). The papyrus lines can be therefore tentatively reconstructed on the basis of the text of the Odyssey and that of the Certamen too, bearing in mind the possibility of textual variations. At least one instance of variation is in fact visible: at ll. 27-8 the papyrus gives the reading φαίνεται, while the Homeric manuscripts and the Certamen read εἶδεται. Some of the editors of the papyrus print εἶδεται, but NETAI at the beginning of l. 28 makes the reading φαίνεται inevitable.

23b. This line is missing in the papyrus.

28-34. ῥηθέν[των ... [πάντες]: the audience's reaction to Homer's verses is very similar in the papyrus and in the manuscript, but each text has its own peculiarities. Cf. Cert. 90-4: ῥηθέντων δὲ τῶν ἐπῶν, οὕτω σφοδρῶς φασὶ θαυματοῦναι ὑπὸ τῶν Ἑλλήνων τοὺς στίχους ὥστε χρυσοῦς αὐτοὺς προσαγορευθῆναι, καὶ ἔτι καὶ νῦν ἐν ταῖς κοιναῖς θυσίαις πρὸ τῶν δείπνων καὶ σπονδῶν προκατεύχεσθαι πάντας. The syntax is different: while the Certamen has two coordinated infinitives (προσαγορευθῆναι ... καὶ ... προκατεύχεσθαι), in the papyrus the second verb ΠΡΟΚΑΤΕΥΟΝ[ seems compatible with an indicative present; reasonable supplements for the first verb, of which fewer traces are left on the papyrus, are Rzach's προσαγορεύσαντες ('after calling them golden verses ... they all invoke them'), or Wilamowitz's προσα[γορεύοντες. Allen's προσαγορευθῆναι seems incompatible with the indicative form of the other verb in the sentence. There are further differences between the two texts: at ll. 30-1 the papyrus gives τοὺς στίχους, which may be used to emend L's τὰ ἔπη (after ὑπὸ τῶν Ἑλλήνων). L's reading does not agree with the following words χρυσοῦς αὐτούς and may well owe its existence to τῶν ἐπῶν earlier in the sentence. Other attempts to emend L are less legitimate. For example, there is no need to insert τούτων at Cert. 90 on the basis of ll. 28-9 of the papyrus (see e.g. Allen). Changing the word order at Cert. 91 on the basis of lines 30-1 of the papyrus is not necessary either; e.g. Allen: θαυμασθῆναι τοὺς στίχους ὑπὸ τῶν Ἑλλήνων, instead of θαυμασθῆναι ὑπὸ τῶν Ἑλλήνων τοὺς στίχους (L: τὰ ἔπη). See apparatus and commentary on Cert. 90-4 for more details. Cert. 92 adds that these verses are performed ‘even today’: καὶ ἔτι καὶ νῦν. This may be an attempt by the author of the Certamen to make his sources seem relevant to his own time.

35-8. ἀχθесθεις ... τούσδε: Hesiod is vexed at Homer’s success and decides to ask a new type of question. The same episode is told in the Certamen (94-6): ὁ δὲ Ἡσίοδος ἀχθесθεις ἐπὶ τῇ Ὀμήρου εὐημερίᾳ ἐπὶ τὴν τῶν ἀπόρων ὥρμησεν ἐπερώτησιν καὶ φησι τούσδε τοὺς στίχους. The end of l. 35 is difficult. Wilamowitz proposed the supplement ἐπὶ τούτοις] ἐ[πὶ τὴν ἀπορίαν (‘vexed at these [verses, he turned] to [asking perplexing questions]’). Colonna connected ε as the last letter of the line with the following line, but there is actually room after it for some more letters.

36. τῆς ἀποκρίσεως: the supplement τῆς ἐρωτήσεως proposed by some of the earliest editors allows to get a correspondence with ἐπὶ τὴν τῶν ἀπόρων ὥρμησεν ἐπερώτησιν (Cert. 95), but the last visible letter of the line almost certainly is A rather than E. Wilamowitz’s τῆς ἀποκρίσεως should therefore be accepted.

38-41. The verses are also preserved in Cert. 97-8. Μοῦσ’ ἄγε: this reading of the text (Wilamowitz, Avezzù; cf. L) is preferable to Μοῦσά γε (Mahaffy Allen Rzach Colonna Cavallo-Maehler): the form ἄγε plus imperative (Μοῦσ’ ἄγε μοι ... ἄειδε) finds parallels in εἴπ’ ἄγε, as found in the same section, Cert. 76 and 81.

41-4. ὁ δ’ Ὀμήρος ... τούσδε: the text of the Certamen (99) runs differently: ὁ

δὲ Ὅμηρος βουλόμενος ἀκολουθῶς τὸ ἄπορον λῦσαι φησὶν. The Certamen resorts to more common words and simpler syntax (τὸ ἄπορον λῦσαι instead of τὴν ἀπορίαν τῆς ἐρωτήσεως λῦσαι, and φησὶν for ἀποφθέγγεται τοὺς στίχους τούσδε. ἀκολουθῶς has no correspondence in the papyrus).

43. ἀποφθ[έγγεται: the last letter before the lacuna can be identified with a good degree of confidence as a θ. The only Greek verb which fits the context is the one proposed by Wilamowitz, ἀποφθέγγομαι.

44-7. [οὐδέποτ' ἀμφὶ ... [περὶ νίχης: these verses are mentioned also in Plu. Dinner of the Seven Sages 154a, in connection with the same contest story (see Introduction, pp. 18-28). Plutarch's text, however, reads ἐπειγόμενοι where the manuscript of the Certamen and the papyrus transmit ἐρίζοντες. The words κἀναχήποδες ἵπποι are missing in L and in Stephanus' copy, and they have been integrated by Barnes on the basis of Plutarch's text. The traces of the letters present in the papyrus fit these words, and confirm the soundness of Barnes' supplement.

47-8. καλῶς δὲ τοῦ Ὁμήρου] : It is difficult to suggest safe supplements for these lines, since only the name of Homer can be read, and it is not present in the corresponding passage of the Certamen (102-3): καλῶς δὲ καὶ ἐν τούτοις ἀπαντήσαντος ἐπὶ τὰς ἀμφιβόλους γνώμας ὥρμησεν ὁ Ἡσίοδος. The end of l. 47 may be tentatively supplemented with καλῶς δὲ τοῦ, but any further attempt at supplementing these lines seems unsafe.

P.Mich. inv. 2754

Catalogues = MP<sup>3</sup> 0076; LDAB 177.

Editions and critical studies mentioned in the apparatus = Winter 1925, Hunt (in Winter 1925), Körte 1927, Solmsen 1932, Page 1935 (appendix to revised edition of Evelyn-White 1914), Kirk 1950, Dodds 1952, West 1967, Koniaris 1971, Renehan 1971 and 1976, Richardson 1981, Avezzi 1982.

P.Mich. inv. 2754 transmits, in ll. 1-14, an account of the death of Homer in a version which is similar to Cert. 327-38; ll. 15-23 contain a section in praise of the poet that is not found in the Certamen or indeed in any other source; a subscriptio giving the name of Alcidamas closes the text. This papyrus was discovered in 1924 during an excavation conducted by the University of Michigan at the Egyptian site of Karanis (Arsinoite nome). It is the final column of a papyrus roll, written both on the recto and on the verso. While the recto is covered by accounts, the verso contains twenty-three lines of text and ends with a subscriptio. Its ‘small well-formed book-hand’ has been dated to the second-third century AD.<sup>133</sup>

P.Mich. inv. 2754 offers important insights into our understanding of the textual tradition of the Certamen, and sheds light on the more general issue of the relationship between Alcidamas and the Certamen. As in the case of the text transmitted by P.Petr. I 25 (1), a comparison between papyrus (esp. ll. 1-14) and manuscript shows that they give virtually the same account of the story.<sup>134</sup> However, the papyrus text is more elaborately phrased, and differs from the manuscript text on some details. The subscriptio allows us to identify Alcidamas as the source for the Certamen’s section on the death of Homer.<sup>135</sup>

TEXT<sup>136</sup>

- 1 οἱ δὲ ὁρῶντες [ς αὐ]τὸν ἐσχεδίασαν τόνδε [τὸ]ν στίχον· ὅσ’ ἔλομεν λ[ι]πόμεσθ’ ὅσ’ οὐκ ἔλομεν φερόμε[σ]θα. ὁ δὲ οὐ δυνάμενος εὐρεῖν τὸ λε-

<sup>133</sup> URL: <http://www.wapp.cc.columbia.edu/ldpd/apis/item?mode=item&key=michigan.apis.1622>. Information on the papyrus is available in the online catalogues MP<sup>3</sup> (0076) and LDAB (177); first published by Winter 1925. An image is available at the URL above. The quotation is from Winter 1925: 120.

<sup>134</sup> In particular, P.Mich. inv. 2754 offers details of the story that are otherwise found only in the Certamen. These will be discussed in the commentary.

<sup>135</sup> Some scholars argue that Alcidamas was the author of the text in ll. 15-23, but not of ll. 1-14. This idea will be challenged in the course of the next pages.

<sup>136</sup> This edition is based on an inspection of the digital image of the papyrus available online at the URL: <http://www.wapp.cc.columbia.edu/ldpd/apis/item?mode=item&key=michigan.apis.1622>.

5 χθὲν ἤρετο αὐτοὺς [ὅτι] λέγοιεν. οἱ δὲ ἔφασαν ἐφ'άλειάν οἰχόμενοι[ι ἀγρ]εῦσαι μὲν οὐδέν, καθήμενο' ἰ' [δ]ὲ φθειρ[ιζ]εσ[θ]αί τῶν δὲ φθειρῶν οὓς ἔλαβον αὐτοῦ κατα[λ]ιπεῖν, οὓς δ' οὐκ ἔλαβον ἐν τοῖς τρίβωσιν ἐ[.]ναποφέρειν. ἀναμνησθεῖς δὲ τοῦ μαντε[ίο]υ [ὅτι] ἡ καταστροφή αὐτῶι το[ῦ] 10 βίου ἦκεν, π[οι]εῖ εἰς ἑαυτὸν ἐπίγραμ[μ]α τό[δ]ε· ἐνθάδ[ε] τὴν ἰε[ρ]ήν κεφαλὴν κατὰ γαῖα κάλυ-ψε, ἀνδρῶν ἡρώων κοσμήτορα θεῖον Ὅμηρ[ο]ν.
 καὶ ἀν[α]χωρῶν' πηλοῦ ὄντος ὀλισθάνει καὶ πε-σὼν ἐπὶ πλευρὰν οὕτως, φασίν, ἐτελεύτησεν.
 15 περὶ τούτου μὲν οὖν ἴποιεῖσθαι τὴν ἀρετὴν ποι-ῆσομεν†, μάλιστα δ' ὁρῶν τοὺς ἱστορικοὺς θαυμαζομένους. Ὅμηρος γοῦν διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ζῶν καὶ ἀποθανὼν τετίμηται παρὰ πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις. ταύτη[.] οὖν αὐτῷ τῆς παιδείας χάριν ἀ-20 ποδίδω[μι, τό τε γ]ένος αὐτοῦ καὶ τὴν ἄλλη[ν] ποί-ησιν δι' ἀκ[ριβ]είας μνήμης τοῖς βουλομένοις φι[λοκαλ]εῖν τῶν Ἑλλήνων εἰς τὸ κοινὸν παραδο]ύς.

[Ἀλκι]δάμαντος

Περὶ Ὁμήρου

2 ἔλομεν ... ἔλομεν: ελ[αβ]ον et ελαβον Π corr. Winter 5 οἰχόμενοι[ι Hunt 6 μενο[υ]' ἰ' Π 7 κατα[.]ιποιεν Π corr. Winter 8 ε[ν]θ' αποφέρειν Winter ἐναποφέρειν Körte Page Kirk Koniaris Renehan 12 ἀνθ' ὁρῶν Π 13 παληου Π corr. Winter 15 ποιεῖσθαι: πονεῖσθαι Dodds secl. Körte lac. post ποιεῖσθαι stat. West 15-16 ποιεῖσθαι ... ποιήσομεν inter cruces Renehan ποιήσομεν:
 πειρασόμεθα Page πειράσομεν Solmsen fort. ποιήσομαι Dodds πειράσομαι Avezzù 16 ὁρων<τες> Winter ὁρῶ Dodds 19 ταύτη[ν] Winter Kirk Dodds West ταύτη[ς] Körte Koniaris; παιδείας Körte Dodds Renehan 19-20 ἀποδίδω[μι, τό τε γ]ένος Avezzù αποδιδω[μεν αγ]ωνος Winter αποδιδό[ντες, τὸ γ]ένος Page Koniaris αποδιδό[ντες] .νος Kirk αποδιδο[ύς τὸ γ]ένος Dodds αποδιδο[ύς, ἀφέμ]ενος West αποδιδό[ ]νος Renehan αποδιδο[.....]ενος Richardson 21 δι' ἀκ[ριβ]είας Körte Kirk Dodds Avezzù δι' αγ[χιστ]ειας Winter διὰ β[ραχ]είας West Koniaris αγ[ ]ειας Renehan 22 φι[λοκαλ]εῖν suppl. Hunt 23 παραδο]ύς Avezzù παραδῶ[σω West, παραδῶ[μεν Winter Kirk Koniaris Renehan, παραδῶ Dodds 25 [Ἀλκι]δάμαντος suppl. Winter.

COMMENTARY

Since its first publication this papyrus has been the object of a lively debate over the authorship of the text transmitted in it and its relationships with the

Certamen. It has been suggested on various grounds that the subscriptio refers only to the text in ll. 15-23, while ll. 1-14 are not by Alcidas; as a consequence, Alcidas should not be seen as the source for the Certamen's section on the death of Homer. However, no indisputable argument has been offered yet as to why we should dissociate Alcidas from ll. 1-14.

The first editor, Winter, had no doubts that the whole text on the papyrus was to be attributed to Alcidas and that the sophist was one of the sources for the Certamen.<sup>137</sup> Soon after that, however, Körte claimed that ll. 1-14 were not by Alcidas because they contain seven instances of hiatus, which Alcidas avoided in his On Sophists: according to Körte, the lines may have been quoted by Alcidas in his work, but were not written by him.<sup>138</sup> Kirk later built on these considerations. He argued that the lines in question are an interpolation from an anonymous Life of Homer into two consecutive sentences of Alcidas' Περὶ Ὁμήρου. He based his argument on a perceived lack of continuity between ll. 1-14 and ll. 15-23; traces of Koiné Greek in ll. 1-14 (ἐσχεδίασαν, ἀλιείαν, φθειρίζεσθαι and the parenthetical use of φασίν); the fact that the Certamen does not mention Alcidas as the source for that specific section, while on other occasions it does; the fact that a 'circumstantial prose biography of Homer' is not likely to have existed 'as early as in the fifth century'.<sup>139</sup> Dodds accepted Kirk's objections to the unity of the papyrus text, but proposed yet another scenario for its transmission: according to him, the roll contained a number of excerpta περὶ Ὁμήρου, and after a quotation on the death of Homer from an anonymous work the compiler quoted an extract from the preface of Alcidas' Musaion to close his collection in a suitably grand <sup>137</sup> Winter 1925: 124-5 claims that 'the new fragment proves conclusively the validity of the Alcidas tradition' because the text at ll. 1-14 'agrees so closely with the Certamen ... that the relationship is apparent', and the subscriptio proves it 'as conclusively as anything can'.

---

<sup>138</sup> Körte 1927.

<sup>139</sup> Kirk 1950: 149-57.

manner.<sup>140</sup> By contrast, Koniaris suggested that the papyrus fragment was part of a roll which contained the Certamen approximately as we have it, followed by a series of quotations about Homer; in his view, a quotation from Alcidamas started the series.<sup>141</sup>

The attempts to deny Alcidamas' authorship of ll. 1-14 were not, however, completely successful. Renehan, building on West's studies, has shown that the forms considered by earlier scholars to contain traces of Koiné Greek are not exclusively postclassical. As for hiatus, Renehan suggests that the avoidance of it in the only treatise by Alcidamas that has reached us in its entirety may be coincidence rather than conscious practice. In fact, he argues on the basis of another fragment, Alcidamas did not always avoid hiatus.<sup>142</sup>

Other arguments can be added. First, the restoration [Ἀλκι]δάμαντος, on the basis of which ll. 15-23 are unanimously attributed to Alcidamas, is ultimately due precisely to the contents of ll. 1-14. In these lines the account of the death of Homer is very similar to that in the Certamen, whose connection with Alcidamas is proved by other independent pieces of evidence.<sup>143</sup> Turning to the alleged break between the two sections, the fact that l. 15 seems to be corrupt suggests that we are not in a strong position to make a judgment.<sup>144</sup> In any case, the two passages still seem to be linked at least at a thematic level. The papyrus does not directly connect Homer's death to his inability to solve a riddle, and therefore does not call his wisdom into question. In this version, the riddle seems to work as no more than a terminus post quem for Homer's death.

---

<sup>140</sup> Dodds 1952.

<sup>141</sup> Koniaris 1971.

<sup>142</sup> West 1967: 434-8, Renehan 1971 and 1976: 144-59.

<sup>143</sup> Renehan 1971: 104 concludes that 'if only lines 15-25 of the papyrus had survived no one would be calling it, as it is commonly called, the Alcidamas papyrus'.

<sup>144</sup> West 1967: 437-8, Renehan 1971: 104 n. 22. Renehan suggests that τούτου in l. 15 may be masculine and refer to Homer. If he is right, that would give us a connection between the two halves of the papyrus on the level of language. See commentary.

This seems to be in line with the content of ll. 15-23, in which Homer is praised: separating Homer's death from an event that could cast doubt on his wisdom is a good way of reinforcing his educative value.<sup>145</sup> Furthermore, the text is copied continuously, with no sign of separation or space between lines 14 and 15, which suggests that the scribe perceived the text that he was copying as a unity, rather than as two separate sections. The subscriptio, then, because of its size and its position at the bottom margin of the papyrus, seems to refer to the whole text rather than only to its final section.

In conclusion, there seem to be good reasons for thinking that Alcidas is the author of the whole text on the papyrus, and that both it and the Certamen go back to Alcidas as their ultimate source.

1-2. οἱ δὲ ... στίχον: the Certamen (327) gives εἰπόντων δὲ ἐκείνων. This phrase introduces the text of the riddle with fewer words than the corresponding one in the papyrus. It is not possible to know whether the papyrus text contained the scene of Homer asking the boys if they had caught anything (Cert. 325-6).

2. ἔλομεν ... ἔλομεν: the papyrus text reads ΕΛΑΒΟΝ in both cases. The fishermen are here clearly addressing Homer in direct speech, and the first plural person is in fact what they are expected to use (cf. also λ[ι]πόμεσθ' and φερόμε[σ]θα). Since Winter 1925: 128, the papyrus reading ΕΛΑΒΟΝ has been considered a diplography arising from the use of the same word in ll. 6-7 (indirect speech).

3-4. ὁ δὲ ... λέγοιεν: the papyrus and the Certamen use the same words to inform us that Homer asked about the meaning of the riddle (Cert. 329: ἤρξετο αὐτοὺς ὅ τι λέγοιεν); but the Certamen's οὐ νοήσας τὸ λεχθέν seems a concise form of the papyrus' ὁ δὲ οὐ δυνάμενος εὐρεῖν τὸ λεχθέν. The story is told with the same details (Homer asks the fisher boys for the meaning of the riddle and they explain it to him) also in the Certamen.

4-6. οἱ δὲ ... φθειρ[ί]ζεσ[θ]αι: cf. Cert. 329-30: οἱ δὲ φασιν ἐν ἀλείᾳ μὲν

---

<sup>145</sup> See also Cert. 323-38n.

ἀγρεῦσαι μηδέν, ἐφθειρίσθαι δέ. In both texts the explanation of the riddle is based on the contrast, indicated by μέν and δέ, between the two actions of fishing and killing the lice (with minimal lexical variations). The participles that in the papyrus further characterise these actions, οἰχόμενοι and καθήμενοι, are dropped in the Certamen.

5. οἰχόμενοι: this form, supplemented by Hunt, is not attested in other accounts of the story but has been unanimously accepted by all editors because, as Winter points out, it accords with the traces and gives the necessary contrast with καθήμενοι.

6-8. τῶν δὲ ... ἐ[.]ναποφέρειν: cf. Cert. 330-2: καὶ τῶν φθειρῶν οὓς ἔλαβον καταλιπεῖν, οὓς δὲ οὐκ ἔλαβον ἐν τοῖς ἱματίοις φέρειν. The Certamen simplifies the papyrus text: it eliminates αὐτοῦ and gives φέρειν instead of a compound of φέρω (though it is difficult to identify the verb: ἐ[.]ναποφέρειν). The Certamen also offers a variation: ἐν τοῖς ἱματίοις for the papyrus' ἐν τοῖς τριβώσιν. It may be relevant that this is a context where variations were indeed common: ἐν τῇ ἐσθῇτι Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 1.4, Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.5; εἰς οἴκους Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 35.

7. κατα[λ]ιπεῖν: Winter's emendation κατα[λ]ιπεῖν for the papyrus' reading KATA[.]ΠΠΟΙΕΝ is here accepted, since it provides a syntactical parallel to the infinitive ἐ[.]ναποφέρειν. The papyrus' spelling may be partially explained through iotacism.

8-12: ἀναμνησθεῖς ... Ὅμηρο[ο]ν: cf. Cert. 332-3: ἀναμνησθεῖς δὲ τοῦ μαντείου ὅτι τὸ τέλος αὐτοῦ ἦκοι τοῦ βίου, ποιεῖ τὸ τοῦ τάφου αὐτοῦ ἐπίγραμμα. The story develops in the same way in the Certamen and in the papyrus: Homer remembers the oracle, its content is briefly summarised, and he then writes his tomb epigram. The oracle is however summarised differently in the two texts: ἡ καταστροφή becomes τὸ τέλος in the Certamen; different verbal forms are used (ἦκοι, ἦκεν); the personal pronoun is used in different cases (dative and genitive); τοῦ βίου is in different positions. Compare also τὸ τοῦ τάφου αὐτοῦ ἐπίγραμμα and εἰς ἑαυτὸν ἐπίγραμ[μ]α τό[δ]ε. τόδε in the papyrus introduces the epigram which is reported straightaway; whereas the author of the Certamen puts it at the very end of his work, after saying that Homer slipped on mud and died. For the position of the epigram in the Certamen see Cert. 336-8n.

12 κάλυψε: the Certamen and most other sources of the epigram have the form καλύπτει, and both forms are equally possible.

13-14. Cf. Cert. 334-5: ἀναχωρῶν δὲ ἐκεῖθεν, ὄντος πηλοῦ ὀλισθῶν καὶ πεσὼν ἐπὶ τὴν πλευράν, τριταῖος ὥς φασι τελευτᾷ. The Certamen short-circuits the balanced syntax of the papyrus texts (ἀν[α]χωρῶν' ... ὀλισθάνει καὶ πεσὼν ... ἐτελεύτησεν) by assimilating ὀλισθάνει to πεσὼν. It also introduces some new ideas: ἐκεῖθεν, τριταῖος and καὶ ἐτάφη ἐν Ἴω.

15-16. περὶ τούτου ... ποιήσομεν†: this sentence, well preserved and clearly readable in the papyrus, is quite obscure in meaning and convoluted in style; the text transmitted seems faulty (hence the cruces, in the absence of fully convincing emendations). This obscure text has also given to several scholars the impression of an abrupt transition between the two sentences, and has been used as evidence for the fact that the papyrus contains two separate texts. However, τούτου in this context can be seen as a masculine pronoun (instead of neuter, as it has so far been interpreted): in this case it would be referring to Homer, resulting in a clearer meaning to the sentence and a better link to the previous one; second, as already mentioned, the version of the death told in the previous lines seems to be in line with the encomiastic tone of this section. Some interpretations (and translations) proposed: Page emended ποιήσομεν to πειρασόμεθα and translated: 'on this subject, then, we shall endeavor to make our reputation'. Solmsen emended to πειράσομεν, while Körte proposed to expunge ποιῆσθαι, and interpreted the passage as 'on this subject, then, we shall make our reputation for excellence'.

16-17. μάλιστα ... θαν- / μαζομένους: the general meaning seems to be that the author wants to enhance Homer's reputation, in competition with that of the historians.

ὄρῳν: there is no reason to propose either ὄρῳν<τες> (Winter) or ὄρῳ (Dodds). The first person singular does not seem to be problematic (and is used later in the text too, if the supplements ἀποδίδω[μι and παραδο[ύς are correct); the participle may function as a reason clause.

τοὺς ἱστορικούς: it has been suggested that Alcidas either sees Homer as a historian (Kirk 1950: 154, who however finds this 'quite untypical of the Greek assessment of Homer') or that he sees himself as one, and Homer as a good subject on which to build his own reputation for excellence (Koniaris 1971: 122). But it seems that Alcidas rather sets himself and Homer against the historians: the particles μέν and δέ and the gist of the passage, as far as it can be reconstructed, seem to suggest this contrast. It is impossible to know more precisely what Alcidas means by 'historians' and how he views them, because this is the only occurrence of the word in his extant works.

17-19. Ὅμηρος ... ἀνθρώ- / ποις: the idea of Homer being honoured by all men is repeatedly emphasized in the Certamen (see also Richardson 1981: 4-5).

19-23. ταύτη[.] ... παραδο[ύς: these last few lines are fundamental to our understanding of the papyrus text. In the first part of the sentence Alcidas thanks Homer (χάριν ἀποδίδ[ ] ) while the second part refers to his account of Homer's life and poetry (γ]ένος ...καὶ τὴν ... ποίησιν ...παραδ[.] – on the supplement γ]ένος see below). In the papyrus the ending of both verbs is unreadable, and there is no agreement among previous editors on the identification of the last letter (o or ω) before both lacunae. Scholars have suggested a range of verbal forms, and as a consequence the syntax of the whole passage has been variously interpreted. Some question the very unity of ll. 1-14 and 15-23. The most plausible supplements for the two verbs are those by Avezzù: ἀποδίδω[μι and παραδο[ύς. He seems right in identifying the traces of the last visible letter of each verb respectively with Ω and Ο, which makes some of the the other supplements that have been proposed altogether impossible (see below). Avezzù's reading also gives a plausible general meaning to the whole fragment: Alcidamas is giving thanks to Homer (now, in the last few lines), after having written (in the previous section of the text, i.e. ll. 1-14) about his life and his poetry. That Alcidamas gives thanks to Homer after discussing the poet's life and poetry sits well with the text of the papyrus, for ll. 1-14 look like the end of a biographical account. The alternatives proposed are less convincing. Page read the lines as meaning 'Let us then thank (χάριν ἀποδιδό[ντες]) him thus ... and as for his origins and the rest of his poetry, let us hand them down (τὸ γένος αὐτοῦ καὶ τὴν ἄλλη[ν] ποίησιν ... παραδῶ[μεν]) ...'. Page's supplements were accepted by Kirk and Koniaris (who however did not propose a translation). Dodds' text and translation are similar: 'offering (ταύτη[ν] ... χάριν ἀποδιδούς) him this tribute, let me publish ... an accurate account of where he came from and what else he wrote (τὸ γένος αὐτοῦ καὶ τὴν ἄλλη[ν] ποίησιν ... παραδῶ)'. None of these texts is paleographically likely (see above, on omega and omicron before the two lacunas) or results in a plausible overall interpretation, for they suggest that Alcidamas' account of Homer's life and poetry is yet to come. Other interpretations seem even less likely: Winter proposes 'let us then give him these thanks for the amusement of the contest itself (ταυτη[ν] αὐτῷ της παιδιας χάριν ἀποδιδῶ[μεν ἀγ]ωνος αὐτοῦ) ... and the rest of his poetry let us hand down (τὴν ἄλλη[ν] ποιησιν παραδῶ[μεν])...' but this rests on an incorrect reading (ἀγ]ωνος in l. 20 cannot be right); while West's 'offering him this return (ταύτη[ν] ... χάριν ἀποδιδούς) ... I will leave him (ἀφ' ἐμ]ενος αὐτοῦ) and go on to make other poets available too (τὴν ἄλλη[ν] ποίησιν ... παραδῶ[σω]).' makes the passage overly convoluted (see also Koniaris 1971: 123).

19. ταύτη[.]: both ταύτη[ν] and ταύτη[ς] seem possible.

τῆς παιδιᾶς: the papyrus reading has sometimes been emended in παιδείας, which results in Alcidamas thanking Homer for his 'educational value' rather than for the ‘entertainment’ he provides. But other sources show that Homer could be associated with παιδιὰ too: in Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 1.5, the manuscripts attest both the reading παιδείας and παιδιᾶς.

20. γ[έ]νος: the letter after the lacuna is with a good degree of certainty E: Winter’s αγ]ωνος is therefore to be rejected. γένος and ποίησις are the subject of many ancient treatises on the poets, including the extant Lives of Homer.

21. δι’ἀκ[ριβ]είας: this supplement seems to be the most plausible in the context: Alcidamas claims that his account of Homer’s life and poetry is precise, rather than short (διὰ β[ραχ]είας: West Koniaris).

P.Ath.Soc.Pap. inv. M2

Catalogues = MP<sup>3</sup> 0077.01; LDAB 6838.

Editions = Mandilaras 1990, reprinted in Mandilaras 1992.

This papyrus fragment transmits a text that has been identified, on the basis of a few visible words in the first lines, as an account of the death of Hesiod similar to that attributed to Alcidamas in the Certamen; cf. Cert. 226-35. The fragment was found in the cartonnage of a mummy, probably in the Fayyum and it belonged to a roll. It is not very well preserved, but thirteen lines of text are visible on the verso. On palaeographical grounds it has been dated to the second century BC.<sup>146</sup>

Although this papyrus has received only little attention compared to the previous two fragments, it does contain some interesting information.<sup>147</sup> The text does not correspond completely to that transmitted in the manuscript, and reveals once again that the literary sources used by the author of the Certamen were subjected to a process of compression and adaptation. Mandilaras shows that in at least two cases (ll. 1-2 and 7) the text of the manuscript is too short to fit the lacunae in the papyrus. Moreover, the presence in l. 8 of ΑΥΤΟΝ, absent from the corresponding passage in the Certamen, shows that the papyrus transmits a somewhat more elaborate text.

---

<sup>146</sup> Information on the papyrus is available in the online catalogues MP<sup>3</sup> (0077.01) and LDAB (6838); it has been published by Mandilaras 1990, reprinted in Mandilaras 1992, which includes an image of the papyrus.

<sup>147</sup> Some scholars ignore it altogether (e.g. Koning 2010). It has been published only once, and has never been the object of further study.

Below is Mandilaras' edition of the text. Although he recognises that the papyrus differs from the manuscript text on several points, he extensively supplemented the former on the basis of the latter. However, we should allow for the possibility that the original text of the papyrus was more different from the Certamen than these supplements suggest.

TEXT

- 1 εἰς δὲ] Οἰνόνην] τῆς Λοκρίδος[ἔρχεται καὶ καταλύει παρ'] Ἀμφιφάνει καὶ Γανύ[κτορι] τοῖς [Φηγέως παισὶν ἀ]γνοήσας τὸ μαντεῖον. Ὁ γὰρ [τόπος οὗτος ἅπας ἐκαλεῖ]ι[το] Διὸς Νεμείου ἱερόν. [Δι]α[τριβῆς]
5 δ' αὐτῷ πλείονος γε]νομένης ἐν τοῖς Οἰνοεῦ]σιν ὑπονοήσαντες] οἱ νεανίσκοι τὴν ἀδελ[φὴν αὐτῶ]ν παρθένον οὔσαν αἰσχῦναι τὸν Ἡσίο]δον[ ἀποκτείναντε]ς αὐτὸν εἰς τὸ μεταξὺ [τῆς ἀκτῆ]ς [τῆς Λοκρίδος καὶ] τῆς Εὐβοίας [πέλαγος κατεπόν-10 τισαν. Ὑστερον δὲ] τοῦ νεκροῦ τρ[ι]τα[ίου πρὸς τὴν γῆν ὑπὸ δελφίνων] προσενεχθέντ[ο]ς [ἐ]ορτῆς [τινος] ἐπιχωρίου παρ' αὐτοῖς οὔ]σ[ης Ἀριαδνεΐας πάντες ἐπὶ τὸν αἰγιαλὸν ἔδραμον καὶ τὸ] σ[ῶμα γνωρίσαν[τες κτλ]

COMMENTARY

1-3. εἰς δὲ ... μαντεῖον: cf. Cert. 226-8: εἰς δὲ Οἰνόνην τῆς Λοκρίδος ἐλθὼν καταλύει παρ' Ἀμφιφάνει καὶ Γανύκτορι, τοῖς Φηγέως παισίν, ἀγνοήσας τὸ μαντεῖον. The first lines of the papyrus are fundamental for identifying the text on the papyrus, as they contain some key elements of the episode: the names Locris (l. 1), Amphiphanes and (partially) Ganymector (l. 2), and a reference to the misunderstood oracle (l. 3). The supplements Οἰνόνην (l. 1) and Φηγέως (l. 2) seem fairly secure, as these same details are found in other versions of the story, including the Certamen (226-7). The Certamen's ἐλθὼν καταλύει is too short to fit the lacuna between lines 1 and 2. Mandilaras proposes ἔρχεται καὶ καταλύει. The suggestion is certainly attractive: we have seen that L makes a more extensive use of subordination than earlier texts, especially through participles (see e.g. P.Mich. inv. 2754 ll. 13-14).

3-4. Ὁ γὰρ ... ἱερὸν: cf. Cert. 228-9: ὁ γὰρ τόπος οὗτος ἅπας ἐκαλεῖτο Διὸς Νεμείου ἱερὸν. Line 4 gives another key phrase, Διὸς Νεμείου. The rest of the text can only be tentatively supplemented on the basis of the manuscript.

4-5. [Δι]α[τριβῆς] ... Ο[ἴνοεῦ]σιν: cf. Cert. 229-30: διατριβῆς δὲ αὐτῶ πλείονος γενομένης ἐν τοῖς †Οἴνωσιν†. That the papyrus reads γε]νομένης in l. 5 is taken for granted by Mandilaras on the basis of the manuscript text. The end of l. 5 would be of great interest if it was better preserved, as it overlaps with a difficult word in the manuscript: Οἴνωσιν. See commentary on Cert. 230.

6-7. Cf. Cert. 230-1: ὑπονοήσαντες οἱ νεανίσκοι τὴν ἀδελφὴν αὐτῶν μοιχεύειν τὸν Ἡσίοδον. From the position of the words νεανίσκοι (which seems to be the only entirely visible word on l. 6) and Ἡσίοδον (reasonable supplement for the only visible letters in l. 7: ΔΟΝ), and the space available for additional letters around these, Mandilaras deduces that once again the text of the Certamen does not fit the papyrus. His supplement παρθένον οὔσαν αἰσχῦναι gives an idea of how much is missing.

8-10. [ἀποκτείναντε]ς ... κατεπόντισαν: cf. Cert. 231-2: ἀποκτείναντες εἰς τὸ μεταξὺ τῆς Εὐβοίας καὶ τῆς Λοκρίδος πέλαγος κατεπόντισαν. The corresponding sentence on the papyrus must have been more elaborate. It contained a personal pronoun that is not attested in the manuscript (l. 8: ΑΥΤΟΝ); the space between εἰς τὸ μεταξὺ and τῆς Εὐβοίας shows that, unlike in the manuscript, something is missing between these words: it is possible that some of the space was occupied by τῆς Λοκρίδος, as Mandilaras suggests, so that we would have the two geographical names in reverse order. Εὐβοίας in l. 9 is a very significant reading: it confirms, against all attempts to emend the corresponding passage in the Certamen, that according to Alcidas the place of Hesiod's death was Eastern Locris. See Cert. 231-2n.

10-14. Ὑστερον δὲ] ... γνωρίσαν- / [τες; cf. Cert. 232-4: τοῦ δὲ νεκροῦ τριταίου πρὸς τὴν γῆν ὑπὸ δελφίνων προσε νεχθέντος ἑορτῆς τινος ἐπιχωρίου παρ' αὐτοῖς οὔσης Ἀριαδνεΐας πάντες ἐπὶ τὸν αἰγιαλὸν ἔδραμον καὶ τὸ σῶμα γνωρίσαντες [...]. The only relevant words that seem to be visible in the papyrus are τοῦ νεκροῦ and προσε νεχθέντ[ο]ς in l. 10 and 11 respectively. Everything else is supplemented to give a readable text.

PFreib. 1.1 b (inv. 12)

Catalogues = MP<sup>3</sup> 1577; LDAB 2729; Cribiore 248.

Edition = Aly 1914.

PFreib. 1.1 b transmits the epigram of Hesiod's victory (Cert. 213-4) as the third in a group of four texts written on the recto of the papyrus. The others are eight comic verses, four epic hexameters and a passage from the Iliad.<sup>148</sup> The papyrus belonged to a roll that was used as a school book; on the recto there are traces of mathematical exercises that were washed out to copy the anthology of verses, and the verso contains a lexicon of Homeric words.<sup>149</sup> It is dated to the second or first century BC.<sup>150</sup>

The text of the epigram as transmitted on the papyrus is identical to that in the manuscript of the Certamen and in most of the other sources. The context in which the epigram is cited, however, makes the contribution of this papyrus very interesting as it proves that the contest story was used in schools; the analysis of the texts with which the epigram is copied in this papyrus, then,

---

<sup>148</sup> See commentary for details.

<sup>149</sup> P.Freib. 1.1 a Ro: MP<sup>3</sup> 2658 ('Exercices de fractions') = LDAB 6902 ('exercise in fractions');
P.Freib. 1 c: MP<sup>3</sup> 1219 ('Homerica, Lexique alphabétique de mots homériques en ou-') =
LDAB 5266 ('Lexicon Homericum, alphabetic').

<sup>150</sup> Information on the papyrus is available in the online catalogues MP<sup>3</sup> (1577) and LDAB (2729); first published by Aly 1914. See also Cribiore 1996: 232. An image is available at the URL: <http://www.ub.uni-freiburg.de/index.php?id=882>.

may give some suggestions as to how the story could have been used.

Below is Aly's edition of the text.

TEXT

- A. ---- σαυτῶ λα/λεῖς;
δοκεῖς τι παρῆχειν/ἔμφασιν λυπουμενῶ;
5 B. ἐ/μοὶ προσανάθου· λαβέ με//σύμβουλον. [τί δ' οὐ;]
μὴ καταφρο/νήσης οἰκέτου συμβουλί/αν.
πολλάκις ὁ δοῦλος τοὺς/τρόπους χρηστοὺς ἔχων/10 τῶν δεσποτῶν ἐγένετο//σωφρονέστερος.
εἰ δ' ἡ τύ/χη τὸ σῶμα κατεδου/λώσατο, ὅ γε νοῦς ὑπάρχει/τοῖς τρόποις ἐλεύθερος./
- 15 ὥς δ' ἄλιεὺς ἀκτῇ ἐν//ἄλιρρᾶντῳ ἐπὶ πέτρῃ/ἀγ(κ)ίστρου δ' ἔλικος τε/λιουχίδα μάστακ' αἰείρας, ᾧδ'----- 20 οὐραχος (?) ἐγ λο/[φιῆς ἀ]παλὴν τρίχα // — ~ πῶυ/.
- Ἡσίοδος Μούσαις Ἑλικωνίσι/τόνδ' ἀνέθηχεν ὕμνω/ν(ι)κήσας ἐν Χαλκίδι θεῖον/Ὀμηρον. //
- 25 χαλκῆω δ' ἐν κεράμῳ δέ/δετο τρεῖσκαίδεκα μῆν(α)ς/
καὶ νύ κεν ἔνθ' ἀπόλοιτο Ἄρης/ἄατος πολέμοιο,/ 30 εἰ μὴ μητρὶν περικαλλῆς //Ἡερίβοια/Ἑρμεία ἔξηγγειλεν· ὁ δ' ἐξέκλε/ψεν Ἄρηα/ἥδη τειρόμενον, χαλεπὸς/δέ ἐ δεσμὸς ἐδάμνα.

COMMENTARY

On this papyrus the epigram of the Certamen is the third in a series of four texts. The verses that open the sequence are from a lost drama from New Comedy in which a slave encourages his master to accept his counsel.<sup>151</sup> The second text (four epic hexameters) is a simile in Homeric style.<sup>152</sup> The contents of the verses, although the second part of the simile is badly preserved, are described by <sup>151</sup> PCG VIII 1027 = CGFP 297. See also Arnott 1999: 78-9 and 2000: 486-9; attributed to Philemon or Menander.

<sup>152</sup> Bernabé 1987: 203 (nr 21). See also Powell 1925: 251, Huxley 1969: 25-6; attributed to Antimachus of Theos or Choirilus.

Huxley with these words: ‘they compare, somewhat uneasily, a fisherman’s rod, baited hook and line with the notch of a spear or arrow dragging out the thin thread from a helmet’s plume through which it has passed’.<sup>153</sup> The epigram of the Certamen is then followed by Iliad 5.387-91, where Dione tells the story of Ares bound by Otus and Ephialtes and helped by Eëriboia. In the Iliad this story occurs in a list of gods wounded by mortals that Dione gives to her daughter Aphrodite, who has just been wounded by Diomedes.

The relationship between these four texts and the presence of such a sequence of material in a schoolbook are not clear, but a recent study argues that three of the passages (i.e. except for the simile) describe people of inferior status who advise or overcome a person of superior status: in these texts there would be a slave who offers advice to his master, a mortal who hurts a god and an inferior poet who wins against a superior one. This suggests that the papyrus contains a list of exempla, which was possibly to be used for rhetorical exercises in schools.<sup>154</sup> If this suggestion is right, the presence of the epigram of Hesiod’s victory against Homer in this context becomes significant of the way Hesiod’s victory was commonly perceived. On a general level, it shows how the story of this poetic contest could enter the repertoires of rhetoricians such as Dio Chrysostomus, Themistius and Libanius. More specifically, the fact that the story is placed among examples of inferior people who overcome their superiors shows that Hesiod’s victory was seen as a crucial, if problematic, feature of the episode. It was the final verdict more perhaps than anything else that encouraged and challenged rhetoricians and other authors to take up the story and shape it to their own purposes.

P.Duk. inv. 665 (olim P.Duk. inv. MF75 6)

Catalogues = MP<sup>3</sup> 0077.02 (antea 2860.01); LDAB 5947.

Edition = Menci 2012.

---

<sup>153</sup> Huxley 1969: 25.

<sup>154</sup> Pordomingo 2010: 52.

A new papyrus has recently been added to the group of known fragments of the Certamen. In 2012, Giovanna Menci of the Istituto Papirologico ‘G. Vitelli’ at Florence pointed out that P.Duk. inv. 665 contains part of an epigram transmitted in the Certamen: the lines in question are Certamen 309–12, that is, the first four lines of the epigram inscribed on the statue of Homer dedicated by the Argives.<sup>155</sup> The fragment, of unknown origin, transmits the text in five lines of script, the first of which is occupied by a short title (Ο]μηρου εν Αργει). The text is on the recto. Menci has dated it to the sixth-seventh century AD.<sup>156</sup>

This papyrus is particularly interesting and its contribution especially welcome because it is the only witness of the Argive epigram other than the Certamen. The fact that we can now compare two versions of the epigram helps us draw some conclusions on the selection, use and transmission of the epigrams present in the Certamen, and indeed of the Certamen itself: adaptability to new contexts and use in schools will appear once again as two of the main characteristics of this material.

Below is Menci’s edition of the text. The supplements she proposes are based on Allen’s text of the Certamen.

TEXT

1	Ο]μηρου εν Αργει Vacuum θειος Ομηρος οδ εστιν ος Ε]λλαδα την [μεγα λαυχον πασαν εκοσμησ]εν καλλιεπι [σοφηι
	] \ _____
	] δ . ριαυχεα Τροιην. [η
5	ρειψαν ποινην ηυ]κομου Ελενης > > –[

<sup>155</sup> The text of the papyrus had previously been catalogued as marginal scholia: ‘Papyrus marginal scholia from Egypt. Mentions Argos, Troy and Helen.’ LDAB and MP<sup>3</sup> have now been updated; cf. Menci 2012: 43 n. 3.

<sup>156</sup> URL: <http://library.duke.edu/rubenstein/scriptorium/papyrus/records/665.html>. Information about the papyrus is available in the online catalogues MP<sup>3</sup> (0077.02) and LDAB (5947); first published by Menci 2012. An image (72 and 150 dpi) is available at the URL above; reproduction in Menci 2012.

For the sake of clarity and following Menci's example, I reproduce here the corresponding text in the Certamen:

θεῖος Ὅμηρος ὅδ' ἐστὶν ὃς Ἑλλάδα τὴν μέγαλαυχον 310 πᾶσαν ἐκόσμησεν καλλιπεῖ σοφίῃ, ἔξοχα δ' Ἀργείους, οἳ τὴν θεοτειχέα Τροίην ἤρειψαν ποινὴν ἠϋκόμου Ἑλένης.

COMMENTARY

The first relevant peculiarity of the papyrus text is that at l. 4 it transmits a variant reading: while the Certamen reads θεοτειχέα ('built by a god'), the papyrus gives the reading ..ριαυχεα that has been supplemented by the editor as ἐριαυχέα ('greatly glorious'). This case of variation is especially interesting because both words seem to be attested nowhere else.<sup>157</sup> The two variants also show how the epigram could be adapted to different contexts and respond to different traditions. The papyrus reading ἐριαυχέα seems to be suitable for a school context. It creates a balance between the two sides of the Trojan war, each qualified with a compound of αὔχη, 'pride': Ἑλλάδα τὴν μέγαλαυχον and τὴν ἐριαυχέα Τροίην. This correspondence between ἐριαυχέα, a hapax, and μέγαλαυχον, an attested adjective, can also aim at explaining the meaning of the former on the basis of the latter. Moreover, ἐριαυχέα is very similar in sound with a Homeric word, ἐριαύχην (an epithet for horses, 'with large neck'): this similarity may have had a role in the creation of the hapax and we may see this as a didactic game on Homeric vocabulary. On the other hand, it may also be noted that θεοτειχέα puts the maximum emphasis on the achievement of the Argives by saying that the walls they destroyed were a creation of the gods, and this makes it fit the encomiastic context of the corresponding passage in the Certamen.<sup>158</sup> However, some readers may have objected that what is built by the gods cannot be destroyed by men: ἐριαυχέα may therefore have worked as a corrective reading. The presence of ἐριαυχέα in place of θεοτειχέα may also correspond to a tradition about the Trojan walls according to which they were not built entirely by the gods. In Il. 6.433-4 Andromache mentions a point on the wall that is particularly vulnerable and open to assault; Pindar (Ol. 8.31-46), referring perhaps to this very passage, says that a portion of the wall was built by a mortal rather than by Apollo and Poseidon.<sup>159</sup>

---

<sup>157</sup> Menci 2012: 46: 'L'alternativa al tràdito θεοτειχέα («con le mura costruite da un dio»), che è hapax legomenon, sembra proprio un altro hapax, ἐριαυχέα («grandemente gloriosa»).' Menci 2012: 45: 'in un papiro che conserva soltanto sei parole pressoché intere, di cui tre nomi propri, è presente sicuramente una variante di un hapax (θεοτειχέα), che è a sua volta hapax (r. 4, ἐριαυχέα); ciò potrebbe dunque accordarsi con l'impressione che si ha da almeno tre degli altri quattro papiri testimoni del Certamen, e cioè la libertà di trattamento che caratterizza testi di questo genere, appartenenti alla letteratura di consumo o scolastica.'

The papyrus also shows that the epigram could circulate in longer or shorter versions. The editor suggests that the quotation of the epigram on the papyrus may be limited to the first four lines.<sup>160</sup> The longer version of the Certamen may be an innovation designed to emphasise the quasi-divine status that Homer has achieved at this point in the narrative.

The fragment may have been part of a roll that contained a collection of epigrams.<sup>161</sup> Although it is later than the assumed time of the composition of the Certamen, it suggests how biographical compilations such as the Certamen may have come into being: authors used material that was available in collections, on which they could draw to enrich and shape the text. The fact that P.Duk. inv.

---

<sup>158</sup> In the Certamen the Argives feel honoured by a passage which Homer performs at Argos and pay him back with signs of divine respect. See esp. Cert. 302-8.

<sup>159</sup> See further Graziosi and Haubold 2010: 33 and 202.

<sup>160</sup> Menci 2012: 43: '...il r. 5 termina con due diploi e un tratto orizzontale la cui funzione potrebbe essere, oltre che riempitiva, indicativa della fine del testo.'

<sup>161</sup> Menci (2012: 45) 'Le peculiarità paleografiche di P.Duk. inv. 665 suggeriscono una copia ad uso privato; la particolare mise en page indirizza verso l'ipotesi di un frammento di rotolo contenente una raccolta di passi, in particolare di epigrammi, destinata alla scuola; tuttavia non si può escludere la possibilità di un foglio isolato.'

665 was probably meant for school use suggests that much of this process took place in school environments.

3. Certamen Homeri et Hesiodi: Edition.

Note

This edition is based on an inspection of the digital images of the manuscript available online on the website of the Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana:

<http://opac.bml.firenze.sbn.it/Manuscript.htm?Segnatura=Plut.56.1>

The line numbers are Allen's.

Sigla

L = Laur. Plut. 56, 1

S = Leid. Voss. Gr. qu. 18 (apograph of L copied by Henri Estienne).

E = Homeri et Hesiodi Certamen. Matronis et aliorum parodiae. Homericorum heroum epitaphia. Excudebat Henr. Stephanus. Geneva 1573 (editio princeps).

Editions

Nietzsche = Nietzsche, F., ed. (1871). "Certamen quod dicitur Homeri et Hesiodi. E codice florentino post Henricum Stephanum denuo edidit Fridericus Nietzsche Numburgensis." Acta societatis philologiae Lipsiensis 1: 1-23.

Allen = Allen, T. W., ed. (1912). Homeri Opera Tomus V: Hymnos Cyclum Fragmenta Margiten Batrachomyomachian Vitas Continens. Oxford.

Rzach = Rzach, A., ed. (1913). Hesiodi Carmina recensuit Aloisius Rzach. Editio Tertia. Accedit Certamen Quod Dicitur Homeri Et Hesiodi. Leipzig.

Evelyn-White = Evelyn White, H. G., ed. (1914). Hesiod, The Homeric Hymns, and HomERICA. Cambridge (MA).

Wilamowitz = Wilamowitz, U. v., ed. (1916). Vitae Homeri et Hesiodi in usum scholarum. Bonn.

Colonna = Colonna, A., ed. (1959). Opera et dies / Hesiodi; recensuit Aristides Colonna. Milan.

Avezzù = Avezzù, G., ed. (1982). Alcidamante. Orazioni e frammenti. Rome.

West = West, M. L., ed. (2003). Homeric Hymns. Homeric Apocrypha. Lives of

Homer. Cambridge (MA).

Earlier editions consulted:

Barnes = Barnes, J., ed. (1711). Ilias et Odyssea. Accedunt Opera Minora. Cambridge.

Boissonade = Boissonade, F., ed. (1824). Hesiodus. Paris.

Goettling = Goettling, C. W., ed. (1843). Hesiodi Carmina. Gotha.

Westermann = Westermann, A., ed. (1845). Biographoi: Vitarum Scriptores Graeci Minores. Braunschweig.

Other critical studies mentioned in the apparatus are cross-referenced to the Bibliography.

Text

Περὶ Ὅμηρου καὶ Ἡσιόδου καὶ τοῦ γένους καὶ ἀγῶνος αὐτῶν

- 1 Ὅμηρον καὶ Ἡσιόδον τοὺς θειοτάτους ποιητὰς πάντες ἄνθρωποι πολίτας ἰδίους εὖχονται λέγεσθαι. ἀλλ' Ἡσιόδος μὲν τὴν ἰδίαν ὀνομάσας πατρίδα πάντας τῆς φιλονεικίας ἀπήλλαξεν εἰπὼν ὥς ὁ πατὴρ αὐτοῦ·
- 5 εἶσατο δ' ἄγχ' Ἑλικῶνος οἰζυρῇ ἐνὶ κώμῃ Ἄσκη, χειῖμα κακῇ, θέρει ἀργαλέῃ, οὐδέ ποτ' ἐσθλῇ.
Ὅμηρον δὲ πᾶσαι ὥς εἰπεῖν αἱ πόλεις καὶ οἱ ἔποικοι αὐτῶν παρ' ἑαυτοῖς γεγενῆσθαι λέγουσιν. καὶ πρῶτοί γε Σμυρναῖοι Μέλῃτος ὄντα τοῦ παρ' αὐτοῖς ποταμοῦ καὶ 10 Κρηθίδος νύμφης κεκλήσθαι φασὶ πρότερον Μελησιγενῇ, ὕστερον μέντοι τυφλωθέντα Ὅμηρον μετονομασθῆναι διὰ τὴν παρ' αὐτοῖς ἐπὶ τῶν τοιούτων συνήθη προσηγορίαν.
Χῖοι δὲ πάλιν τεκμήρια φέρουσιν ἴδιον εἶναι πολίτην λέγοντες καὶ περισφύζεσθαι τινὰς ἐκ τοῦ γένους αὐτοῦ παρ' 15 αὐτοῖς Ὀμηρίδας καλουμένους. Κολοφώνιοι δὲ καὶ τόπον δεικνύουσιν, ἐν ᾧ φασιν αὐτὸν γράμματα διδάσκοντα τῆς ποιήσεως ἄρξασθαι καὶ ποιῆσαι πρῶτον τὸν Μαργίτην.

5-6 Hes. Op. 639-40 5 νάσσατο Hes.

2 λεγέσθαι L corr. S : γενέσθαι Barnes Nietzsche Rzach Evelyn-White 5 εἶσατο L corr. S 7 ἄποικοι Hermann (1835: 282) Nietzsche Evelyn-White 8 γεγεννησθαι ... τε L corr. S 10 Κρηθίδος edd. Κρηθίδος Barnes; Μελησιγένῃ edd.

περὶ δὲ τῶν γονέων αὐτοῦ πάλιν πολλή διαφωνία παρὰ παᾶσιν ἔστιν. Ἑλλάνικος <4 F 5c = fr. 5 Fowler> μὲν γὰρ καὶ Κλεάνθης 20 <fr. 592 Arnim; cf. et 84 F 40> Μαίονα λέγουσιν, Εὐγαίων <535 F 2 = 2 Fowler>
δὲ Μέλητα, Καλλικλῆς <758 F 13c> δὲ †Μασαγόραν, Δημόκριτος δὲ <ὁ> Τροϊζήνιος <Suppl. Hell. 378> Δαήμονα ἔμπορον, ἔνιοι δὲ Θαμύραν, Αἰγύπτιοι
δὲ Μενέμαχον ἱερογραμματέα, εἰσὶ δὲ οἱ Τηλέμαχον τὸν Ὀδυσσεῶς· μητέρα δὲ οἱ μὲν Μῆτιν, οἱ δὲ Κρηθίδα, 25 οἱ δὲ Θεμίτην, οἱ δὲ Εὐγνηθῶ, ἔνιοι δὲ Ἰθακησίαν τινὰ ὑπὸ Φοινίκων ἀπεμποληθεῖσαν, οἱ δὲ Καλλιόπην τὴν Μοῦσαν, τινὲς δὲ Πολυκάστην τὴν Νέστορος. ἐκαλεῖτο δὲ Μέλης, ὡς δὲ τινὲς φασὶ Μελησιγενῆς, ὡς <δ'> ἔνιοι
Αὐλητῆς. ὀνομασθῆναι <δ'> αὐτόν φασὶ τινες Ὅμηρον διὰ τὸ
30 τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ Ὅμηρον δοθῆναι ὑπὸ Κυπρίων Πέρσαις, οἱ

19 Νεάνθης von Arnim (1905: 133) Colonna 20 Μαίονα: μ in ras. L rest. Sturz (1787: fr. 171) : βίωνα E; Εὐγαίων: γ in ras. L rest. Meineke (1843: 61) : Εὐμαίων S E 21 †Μασαγόραν Wilamowitz : Δμασαγόραν Barnes Westermann Allen Colonna West (coll. Eust. Od. 1713.17) Μνασαγόραν Rzach Evelyn-White Μαιαγόραν Nietzsche; Δημοκρίνης in app. Allen (coll. Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.3) 23 ἱερογραμματέα: ιε in ras. L rest. Nauck (coll. Tz. Alleg. 60) : προγραμματέα S in marg. Nietzsche 25 Θεμίστην S edd. Θεμιστώ Barnes (coll. Paus. 10.24); Εὐγνηθῶ: Ὑρνηθῶ Westermann edd. (coll. Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.1) praeter Nietzsche Evelyn-White; Ἰθακησίαν Rzach 28 Μελησιγενῆς edd. 29 αὐλητήν L : Ἄλτης Welcker (1835 I: 149) edd. (coll. Schol. T II. 22.51) 29-30 post φασὶ et αὐτοῦ dist. L

δὲ διὰ τὴν πῆρῳσιν τῶν ὁμμάτων· παρὰ γὰρ τοῖς Αἰολεῦσιν οὕτως οἱ πηροὶ καλοῦνται. ὅπερ δὲ ἀκηκόαμεν ἐπὶ τοῦ θειοτάτου αὐτοκράτορος Ἀδριανοῦ εἰρημένον ὑπὸ τῆς Πυθίας περὶ Ὀμήρου, ἐκθησόμεθα. τοῦ γὰρ βασιλέως πυθομένου

35 πόθεν Ὀμηρος καὶ τίνος, ἀπεφοίβασε δι' ἑξαμέτρου τόνδε τὸν τρόπον·

ἄγνωστόν μ' ἔρεαι γενεὴν καὶ πατρίδα γαῖαν

ἀμβροσίου σειρήνος. ἔδος δ' Ἰθακήσιός ἐστιν,

Τηλέμαχος δὲ πατὴρ καὶ Νεστορὴ Ἐπικάστη

40 μήτηρ, ἣ μιν ἔτικτε βροτῶν πολὺ πάνσοφον ἄνδρα.

οἷς μάλιστα δεῖ πιστεύειν διὰ τε τὸν πυθόμενον καὶ τὸν ἀποκρινάμενον, ἄλλως τε οὕτως τοῦ ποιητοῦ μεγαλοφυῶς τὸν προπάτορα διὰ τῶν ἐπῶν δεδοξασκότος.

37-40 AP 14.102 37 ἐρέεις γενεῆς καὶ πατρίδος αἴης AP 38 Ἰθάκη τις Ὀμήρου
AP 39 Πολυκάστη AP 40 πολυπάνσοφον ἄλλων AP

33 ἀδιανοῦ L corr. S in marg. 39 Πολυκάστη Nietzsche in app. West (coll. Od.
3.464 et Cert. 27) 40 πέρι πάνσοφον West

ἔνιοι μὲν οὖν αὐτὸν προγενέστερον Ἡσιόδου φασὶν 45 εἶναι, τινὲς δὲ νεώτερον καὶ συγγενῇ. γενεαλογοῦσι δὲ οὕτως· Ἀπόλλωνός φασι καὶ Θωώσης τῆς Ποσειδῶνος γενέσθαι Λίνον, Λίνου δὲ Πίερον, Πιέρου δὲ καὶ νύμφης Μεθώνης Οἶαγρον, Οἶαγρου δὲ καὶ Καλλιόπης Ὀρφέα, Ὀρφέως δὲ Ὀρτην, τοῦ δὲ Ἀρμονίδην, τοῦ δὲ Φιλοτέρπην, 50 τοῦ δὲ Εὐφημον, τοῦ δὲ Ἐπιφράδην, τοῦ δὲ Μελάνωπον, τούτου δὲ Δῖον καὶ Ἀπέλλαιον, Δίου δὲ καὶ Πυκτιμήδης τῆς Ἀπόλλωνος θυγατρὸς Ἡσίοδον καὶ Πέρσῃν· Πέρσου δὲ Μαίονα, Μαίονος δὲ θυγατρὸς καὶ Μέλητος τοῦ ποταμοῦ Ὀμηρον.

46-53: cf. Charax (103 F 62) apud Suda Ὀμηρος 1 49-53 cf. Hellanicus (4 F 5b = fr. 5 Fowler), Damastes (5 F 11b = fr. 11 Fowler), Pherecydes (3 F 167 = fr. 167 Fowler) apud Procl. Vit. Hom. 4

46 Αἰθούσης Nietzsche Rzach Evelyn-White (coll. 103 F 62) 49 Ὀρτην: Δρῆν Goettling Nietzsche Rzach Evelyn-White (coll. 103 F 62) Ὀθρυν Barnes Ὀτρυν Welcker (1835, I: 149); τοῦ δὲ Εὐκλέα post Ὀρτην add. Goettling Nietzsche Rzach Evelyn-White West (coll. 103 F 62); Ἀρμονίδην: Ἰαδμονίδην Nietzsche Rzach (coll. Hdt. 2.134, Plu. De Sera Numinis Vindicta 557) id est Ἰδμονίδην (cf. 103 F 62, Procl. Vit. Hom. 4) 52 Πέρσου: Ἀπέλλου Nietzsche Ἀπελλοῦ Rzach Wilamowitz Evelyn-White Ἀπελλαίου West 53 θυγατρὸς καὶ: καὶ θυγατρὸς Nietzsche Rzach Evelyn-White

τινὲς δὲ συνακμάσαι φασὶν αὐτοὺς ὥστε καὶ ἀγωνίσασθαι
 55 ὁμόσε <γενομένους> ἐν Αὐλίδι τῆς Βοιωτίας. ποιήσαντα γὰρ τὸν Μαργίτην
 Ὅμηρον περιέρχεσθαι κατὰ πόλιν ῥαψωδοῦντα, ἐλθόντα δὲ καὶ εἰς Δελφοὺς περὶ τῆς πατρίδος αὐτοῦ πυνθάνεσθαι τίς εἴη, τὴν δὲ Πυθίαν εἰπεῖν·
 ἔστιν Ἴος νῆσος μητρὸς πατρὶς, ἥ σε θανόντα 60 δέξεται· ἀλλὰ νέων παίδων αἶνιγμα φύλαξαι.
 τὸν δὲ ἀκούσαντα περιστάσθαι μὲν τὴν εἰς Ἴον ἄφιξιν, διατρίβειν δὲ περὶ τὴν ἐκεῖ χώραν. κατὰ δὲ τὸν αὐτὸν

59-60 AP 14.65; Paus. 10.24; Procl. Vit. Hom. 5; St. Byz. s.v. Ἴος; Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom.

1.4 60 παίδων: ἀνδρῶν Ps.-Plu. Procl.

55 <γενομένους> Busse (1909: 112-3) Wilamowitz West : ἐν Χαλκίδι τῆς Εὐβοίας Nietzsche Evelyn-White ἐξ Αὐλίδος τῆς Βοιωτίας Gallavotti (1929: 40
 n. 2) Avezzi (coll. Hes. Op. 651)

χρόνον Γανύκτωρ ἐπιτάφιον τοῦ πατρὸς Ἀμφιδάμαντος βασιλέως Εὐβοίας ἐπιτελῶν πάντας τοὺς ἐπισήμους ἄνδρας 65 οὐ μόνον ῥώμῃ καὶ τάχει, ἀλλὰ καὶ σοφίᾳ ἐπὶ τὸν ἀγῶνα μεγάλαις δωρεαῖς τιμῶν συνεκάλεσεν. καὶ οὗτοι οὖν ἐκ τύχης, ὥς φασι, συμβαλόντες ἀλλήλοις ἦλθον εἰς τὴν Χαλκίδα. τοῦ δὲ ἀγῶνος ἄλλοι τέ τινες τῶν ἐπισήμων
 Χαλκιδέων ἐκαθέζοντο κριταὶ καὶ μετ' αὐτῶν Πανοίδης, 70 ἀδελφὸς ὢν τοῦ τετελευτηκότος. ἀμφοτέρων δὲ τῶν ποιη-τῶν θαυμαστῶς ἀγωνισαμένων νικῆσαί φασι τὸν Ἡσίοδον τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον· προελθόντα γὰρ εἰς τὸ μέσον πυνθάνεσθαι τοῦ Ὀμήρου καθ' ἓν ἕκαστον, τὸν δὲ Ὀμηρον ἀποκρίνασθαι. φησὶν οὖν Ἡσίοδος·

69-102 cf. P.Petr. I 25 (1) 69 Πανήδης P.Petr. I 25 (1) l. 4

63 Γαννύκτωρ L 69 Πανείδης Hermann (1835: 151) Nietzsche Evelyn-White
 Πανήδης Rzach Allen Wilamowitz Colonna Avezzù West (coll. P.Petr. I 25)

75            υἱὲ Μέλητος Ὀμηρε θεῶν ἄπο μήδεα εἰδὼς εἶπ' ἄγε μοι πάμπρωτα τί φέρτατόν ἐστι βροτοῖσιν;

Ὀμηρος·

ἀρχὴν μὲν μὴ φῦναι ἐπιχθονίοισιν ἄριστον, φύντα δ' ὅμως ὥκιστα πύλας Αἴδαο περῆσαι.

80        Ἡσίοδος τὸ δεύτερον· εἶπ' ἄγε μοι καὶ τοῦτο θεοῖς ἐπιείκελ' Ὀμηρε, τί θνητοῖς κάλλιστον οἶεαι ἐν φρεσὶν εἶναι;

ὁ δέ·

ὁππότ' ἂν εὐφροσύνη μὲν ἔχη κατὰ δῆμον ἅπαντα,

85        δαιτυμόνες δ' ἀνὰ δώματ' ἀκουάζωνται ἀοιδοῦ ἤμενοι ἐξείης, παρὰ δὲ πλήθωσι τράπεζαι σίτου καὶ κρειῶν, μέθυ δ' ἐκ κρητῆρος ἀφύσσω οἰνοχόος φορέησι καὶ ἐγχείῃ δεπάεσσιν.
              τοῦτό τί μοι κάλλιστον ἐνὶ φρεσὶν εἶδεται εἶναι.

78-9 Thgn. 425 + 427; Stob. 4.52.22; P.Petr. I 25 (ll. 12-5) 78 ἀρχήν: πάντων Thgn.

79 ὅπως Thgn. Stob. P.Petr. I 25 84-89 Od. 9.6-11 84 ὁππότ' ἂν εὐφροσύνη: ἢ ὅτ' εὐφροσύνη Od. 9.6 89 εἶδεται: φαίνεται P.Petr. I 25 (ll. 27-8).

79 ὅπως Nietzsche Rzach Wilamowitz Evelyn-White (coll. Thgn. 425) 82
θνητοῖσιν ἄριστον L corr. Rzach Evelyn-White Allen West (coll. P.Petr. I 25 l.
18)

- 90 ῥηθέντων δὲ τῶν ἐπῶν, οὕτω σφοδρῶς φασι θαυ-μασθῆναι ὑπὸ τῶν Ἑλλήνων τοὺς στίχους ὥστε χρυσοῦς αὐτοὺς προσαγορευθῆναι, καὶ ἔτι καὶ νῦν ἐν ταῖς κοιναῖς θυσίαις πρὸ τῶν δείπνων καὶ σπονδῶν προκατεύχεσθαι πάντας. ὁ δὲ Ἡσίοδος ἀχθεσθεὶς ἐπὶ τῇ Ὀμήρου εὐημερία 95 ἐπὶ τὴν τῶν ἀπόρων ὥρμησεν ἐπερώτησιν καὶ φησι τούσδε τοὺς στίχους·
- Μοῦς' ἄγε μοι τά τ' ἐόντα τά τ' ἐσσόμενα πρό τ' ἐόντα τῶν μὲν μηδὲν ἄειδε, σὺ δ' ἄλλης μνήσαι ἀοιδῆς.
ὁ δὲ Ὀμηρος βουλόμενος ἀκολούθως τὸ ἄπορον λῦσαι φησὶν·
- 100 οὐδέ ποτ' ἀμφὶ Διὸς τύμβῳ καναχήποδες ἵπποι
ἄρματα συντρίψουσιν ἐρίζοντες περὶ νίκης.

100-1 Plu. Sept. Sap. Conv. 154a 101 ἐρίζοντες: ἐπειγόμενοι Plu.

90 τούτων τῶν ἐπῶν Rzach Allen Evelyn-White Wilamowitz West (coll. P.Petr. I 25 ll. 28-9) 91 τοὺς στίχους: τὰ ἔπη L corr. Rzach Allen Evelyn-White Wilamowitz West (coll. P.Petr. I 25 l. 31); τοὺς στίχους ὑπὸ τῶν Ἑλλήνων Allen 92 αὐτοὺς <στίχους> Nietzsche (στίχους in marg. S) 97 Μοῦσά γέ Rzach 100 καναχήποδες ἵπποι om. L S rest. Barnes (coll. Plu.; cf. et P.Petr. I 25 l. 45-6)

- καλῶς δὲ καὶ ἐν τούτοις ἀπαντήσαντος ἐπὶ τὰς ἀμφιβόλους γνώμας ὥρμησεν ὁ Ἡσίοδος, καὶ πλείονας στίχους λέγων ἡξίου καθ' ἓνα ἕκαστον συμφώνως ἀποκρίνασθαι τὸν Ὅμηρον.
- 105 ἔστιν οὖν ὁ μὲν πρῶτος Ἡσιόδου, ὁ δὲ ἑξῆς Ὀμήρου, ἐνίοτε δὲ
 καὶ διὰ δύο στίχων τὴν ἐπερώτησιν ποιουμένου τοῦ Ἡσιόδου·
 Hes. δεῖπνον ἔπειθ' εἵλοντο βοῶν κρέα καὶ χένας ἵππων
 Hom. ἔκλυον ἰδρώοντας, ἐπεὶ πολέμοιο κορέσθην.
 Hes. καὶ Φρύγες, οἱ πάντων ἀνδρῶν ἐπὶ νηυσὶν ἄριστοι
- 110 Hom. ἀνδράσι ληιστῆρσιν ἐπ' ἀκτῆς δόρπον ἐλέσθαι.
 Hes. χερσὶ βαλὼν ἰοῖσιν ὅλων κατὰ φύλα γιγάντων
 Hom. Ἡρακλῆς ἀπέλυσεν ἀπ' ὤμων καμπύλα τόξα.
- 107-8 Ar. Pax 1282-3 107 δεῖπνον ἔπειθ' εἵλοντο: ὡς οἱ μὲν δαίνυντο Ar. 108
 ἐπεὶ πολέμου ἐκόρεσθην Ar.
- 108 πτολέμου L S corr. E; πολέμου ἐκόρεσθην Wilamowitz (coll. Ar. Pax 1283)
- 110 δόρπα πένεσθαι Wilamowitz West δοῦλοι ἔπεσθαι in app. Nietzsche 111-112 hoc ordine Nietzsche pler. edd. 112-111 L Allen Colonna 111 ἰοῖσιν: ἰούς
 Nietzsche in app.; ὅλων L; ἰούς οὔλον Rzach Evelyn-White ἰούς ἀνόμων Wilamowitz West 112 Ἡρακλέης edd. praeter Wilamowitz

- Hes. οὗτος ἀνὴρ ἀνδρός τ' ἀγαθοῦ καὶ ἀνάλκιδός ἐστι
Hom. μητρός, ἐπεὶ πόλεμος χαλεπὸς πάσῃσι γυναιξίν.
115 Hes. οὐτ' ἄρ σοί γε πατὴρ ἐμίγη καὶ πότνια μήτηρ
Hom. ἥσῳμα τό γ' ἐσπείραντοῖ δια χρυσῆν Ἀφροδίτην.
Hes. αὐτὰρ ἐπεὶ δμήθη γάμῳ Ἄρτεμις ἰοχέαιρα
Hom. Καλλιστῶ κατέπεφνεν ἀπ' ἀργυρέοιο βιοῖ<ο>.
Hes. ὥς οἱ μὲν δαίνυντο πανήμεροι, οὐδὲν ἔχοντες 120 Hom. οἴκοθεν, ἀλλὰ παρεῖχεν ἄναξ ἀνδρῶν Ἀγαμέμνων.
Hes. δεῖπνον δειπνήσαντες ἐνὶ σποδῷ αἰθαλοέσση
Hes. σύλλεγον ὅστέα λευκὰ Διὸς κατατεθνηῶτος
Hom. παιδὸς ὑπερθύμου Σαρπηδόνοιο ἀντιθέοιο.
Hes. ἡμεῖς δ' ἄμ πεδίον Σιμοέντιον ἤμενοι οὕτως
125 Hes. ἴομεν ἐκ νηῶν ὁδὸν ἀμφ' ὤμοισιν ἔχοντες
Hom. φάσγανα κωπήεντα καὶ αἰγανέας δολιχάλους.

115 οὐ γάρ Westermann ἢ τ' ἄρα Hermann (1835: 284) Nietzsche αὐτὰρ Rzach Evelyn-White οὐ τ' ἄρ Wilamowitz; ἐμίγην Wilamowitz 116 cruces West : τότε σπείραντε Hermann Nietzsche Wilamowitz τό γε σπείραντε Rzach Evelyn-White 122 κατατεθνηῶτος Goettling Allen Rzach Evelyn-White Colonna 124 σιμοοῦντιον L corr. Barnes; οὕτως L Wilamowitz : αὐτως Barnes edd. cet.; ἡμενοι οὕτως inter cruces West; post 124 lacunam stat. Barnes Goettling Westermann

- Hes. δὴ τότε ἀριστῆες κοῦροι χεῖρεςσι θαλάσσης
 Hom. ἄσμενοι ἐσσυμένως τε ἀπείρυσαν ὠκύαλον ναῦν.
 Hes. κολχίδ' ἔπειτ' ἤγοντο καὶ Αἰήτην βασιλῆα 130 Hom. φεῦγον, ἐπεὶ γίγνωσκον ἀνέστιον ἢδ' ἀθέμιστον.
 Hes. αὐτὰρ ἐπεὶ σπεῖσάν τε καὶ ἔκπιον οἶδμα θαλάσσης
 Hom. ποντοπορεῖν ἤμελλον ἐυσέλμων ἐπὶ νηῶν.
 Hes. τοῖσιν δ' Ἀτρεΐδης μεγάλ' εὖχετο πᾶσιν ὀλέσθαι
 Hom. μηδέ ποτ' ἐν πόντῳ, καὶ φωνήσας ἔπος ηὔδα·
 135 Hes. ἐσθιέτ' ὦ ξεῖνοι, καὶ πίνετε· μηδέ τις ὑμῶν
 Hes. οἴκαδε νοστήσειε φίλην ἐς πατρίδα γαῖαν
 Hom. πημανθείς, ἀλλ' αὖτις ἀπήμονες οἴκαδ' ἴκοισθε.

127 ἀριστή L corr. S 129 ἔπειθ' ἴκοντο L corr. Wilamowitz Rzach Evelyn-White West; βασιλεῖα L 132 ἐυσσέλμων edd. 133-7 sic Goettling Evelyn-White Di
 Benedetto (1969: 163) Avezzù West : 133-134 Hesiodo 135-137 Homero tribuit Hermann, 133-136 Hesiodo 137 Homero Nietzsche, 134 καὶ φωνήσας ἔπος
 ηὔδα Hesiodo Busse Rzach Wilamowitz

πρὸς πάντα δὲ τοῦ Ὀμήρου καλῶς ἀπαντήσαντος πάλιν φησὶν ὁ Ἡσίοδος·

- 140            τοῦτό τι δὴ μοι μῶνον ἐειρομένῳ κατάλεξον, πόσσοι ἄμ' Ἀτρεΐδῃσιν ἐς Ἴλιον ἦλθον Ἀχαιοί;
                 ὁ δὲ διὰ λογιστικοῦ προβλήματος ἀποκρίνεται οὕτως· πεντήκοντ' ἦσαν πυρὸς ἐσχάραι, ἐν δὲ ἐκάστη πεντήκοντ' ὀβελοί, περὶ δὲ κρέα πεντήκοντα·
- 145            τρεῖς δὲ τριηκόσιοι περὶ ἓν κρέας ἦσαν Ἀχαιοί.
                 τοῦτο δὲ εὐρίσκεται πλήθος ἄπιστον· τῶν γὰρ ἐσχαρῶν οὐσῶν πεντήκοντα ὀβελίσκοι γίνονται πεντακόσιοι καὶ
- 148            χιλιάδες β', κρεῶν δὲ δεκαδύο μυριάδες ,ε ὡν . . . κατὰ

142 ὁ δὲ Ὀμηρος Barnes Goettling 146-8 interpolationem stat. West 148 ,ε***
Westermann Nietzsche Rzach Allen Colonna <χιλιάδες> ,ε Boissonade Wilamowitz <καὶ χιλιάδες> ε' ὡν West

πάντα δὴ τοῦ Ὀμήρου ὑπερτεροῦντος φθονῶν ὁ Ἡσίοδος

150 ἄρχεται πάλιν·

υἱὲ Μέλητος Ὀμηρ' εἴ περ τιμῶσί σε Μοῦσαι, ὥς λόγος, ὑψίστοιο Διὸς μεγάλοιο θύγατρες, λέξον μέτρῳ ἐναρμόζων ὅ τι δὴ θνητοῖσι κάλλιστόν <τε> καὶ ἔχθιστον· <πο>θέω γὰρ ἀκοῦσαι.

155 ὁ δέ φησι·

Ἡσίοδ' ἔκγονε Δίου ἐκόντα με ταῦτα κελεύεις εἰπεῖν· αὐτὰρ ἐγὼ μάλα τοι πρόφρων ἀγορεύσω.
κάλλιστον μὲν τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἔσται μέτρον εἶναι αὐτὸν ἑαυτῷ, τῶν δὲ κακῶν ἔχθιστον ἀπάντων.

160 ἄλλο δὲ πᾶν ὅ τι σῶ θυμῷ φίλον ἐστὶν ἐρώτα.

Hes. πῶς ἂν ἄριστ' οἰκοῖντο πόλεις καὶ ἐν ἡθεσι ποίοις;

Hom. εἰ μὴ κερδαίνειν ἀπὸ τῶν αἰσχροῶν ἐθέλοιεν, οἱ δ' ἀγαθοὶ τιμῶντο, δίκη δ' ἀδίκοισιν ἐπεΐη.

152 ὑψίστοι L corr. S in marg. 153 μέτρον L corr. Barnes Wilamowitz West; ἐναρμόζων L corr. Boissonade edd. 154 <τε> S <πο>θέω: θεω L ἴσως ποθέω S in marg. post 159 versum 165 pos. SE lacunam stat. Nietzsche Rzach 163 τιμοῖντο LSE post 163 lacunam stat. Hermann

- Hes. εὐχεσθαι δὲ θεοῖς ὅ τι πάντων ἐστὶν ἄμεινον;
- 165 Hom. εὖνουν εἶναι ἑαυτῷ <ἀεὶ> χρόνον ἐς τὸν ἅπαντα.
Hes. ἐν δ' ἐλαχίστῳ ἄριστον ἔχεις ὅ τι φύεται εἰπεῖν;
Hom. ὥς μὲν ἐμῇ γνώμῃ φρένες ἐσθλαὶ σώμασιν ἀνδρῶν.
Hes. ἡ δὲ δικαιοσύνη τε καὶ ἀνδρεία δύναται τί;
Hom. κοινὰς ὠφελίας ἰδίῳις μόχθοισι πορίζειν.
- 170 Hes. τῆς σοφίης δὲ τί τέκμαρ ἐπ' ἀνθρώποισι πέφυκεν;
Hom. γινώσκειν τὰ παρόντ' ὀρθῶς, καιρῷ δ' ἅμ' ἔπεσθαι.
Hes. πιστεῦσαι δὲ βροτοῖς ποῖον χρέος ἄξιόν ἐστιν;
Hom. οἷς αὐτὸς κίνδυνος ἐπὶ πραχθεῖσιν ἔπεται.
Hes. ἡ δ' εὐδαιμονία τί ποτ' ἀνθρώποισι καλεῖται;
Hom. λυπηθέντ' ἐλάχιστα θανεῖν ἢσθέντα <τε> πλεῖστα.

164 θεοῖσι τί Nietzsche Rzach Wilamowitz West 165 <ἀεὶ> S Nietzsche Allen Evelyn-White Colonna : εὖνομον εἶναι ἐῷ θυμῷ Rzach εὖνουν εἶναι ἐοῖ αὐτῷ Wilamowitz †εἶναι ἑαυτῷ† West 166 ἔχειν σ' L corr. edd. 167 ἐμῇ γνώμῃ Nietzsche Rzach Allen Evelyn-White Colonna West 168 ἀνδρεία L; δύναται τι L 169 ὠφελείας L corr. S 171 γινώσκειν LSE 172 βροτοῖσι LSE corr. Barnes 173 οἷς αὐτοῖς Wilamowitz; ἔτι L corr. S in marg. 175 <τε> S

ῥηθέντων δὲ καὶ τούτων, οἱ μὲν Ἕλληνες πάντες τὸν Ὅμηρον ἐκέλευον στεφανοῦν, ὁ δὲ βασιλεὺς Πανοίδης ἐκέλευσεν ἕκαστον τὸ κάλλιστον ἐκ τῶν ἰδίων ποιημάτων εἰπεῖν. Ἡσίοδος οὖν ἔφη πρῶτος·

- 180 Πληιάδων Ἀτλαγενέων ἐπιτελλομενάων
ἄρχεσθ' ἀμήτου, ἀρότιό τε δυσομενάων· αἱ δὴ τοι νύκτας τε καὶ ἡμέρας τεσσαράκοντα κεκρύφεται, αὖθις δὲ περιπλομένου ἐνιαυτοῦ φαίνονται, τὰ πρῶτα χαρασσομένοιο σιδήρου.
185 οὗτός τοι πεδίων πέλεται νόμος, οἳ τε θαλάσσης ἐγγύθι ναιετάουσ', οἳ τ' ἄγχεα βησσήεντα πόντου κυμαίνοντος ἀπόπροθι πίονα χῶρον ναίουσιν· γυμνὸν σπείρειν, γυμνὸν δὲ βοωτεῖν, γυμνόν τ' ἀμάειν, ὅτ' ἂν ὥρια πάντα πέλωνται.

180-9 = Hes. Op. 383-92 181 ἀρότιο δὲ Hes. Op. 384 183 αὖτις Hes. Op. 386

189 εἰ χ' ὥρια πάντ' ἐθέλησθα Hes. Op. 392

177 Πανοίδης cf. 69 181 ἀμητοῖο L corr. edd. (coll. Op. 384) 183 αὖτις
Nietzsche Allen Rzach Evelyn-White Colonna Avezzù coll. Op. 386 186 ἄγγεα
L corr. edd. 189 γυμνούς θ' L corr. edd. (coll. Op. 392)

190 μεθ' ὃν Ὅμηρος·

ἀμφὶ δ' ἄρ' Αἴαντας δοιοὺς ἴσταντο φάλαγγες καρτεραί, ἅς οὔτ' ἄν κεν Ἄρης ὀνόσαιτο μετελθών οὔτε κ' Ἀθηναίη λαοσσόος. οἱ γὰρ ἄριστοι κρινθέντες Τρῳάς τε καὶ Ἑκτορα δῖον ἔμιμνον 195 φράξαντες δόρυ δουρί, σάκος σάκεϊ προθελύμνῳ· ἀσπίς ἄρ' ἀσπὶδ' ἔρειδε, κόρυς κόρυν, ἀνέρα δ' ἀνήρ, ψαῦον δ' ἵππόκομοι κόρυθες λαμπροῖσι φάλοισι νευόντων· ὥς πυκνοὶ ἐφέστασαν ἀλλήλοισιν ἔφριξεν δὲ μάχη φθισίμβροτος ἐγχείησι 200 μακραῖς, ἅς εἶχον ταμεσίχροας. ὅσσε δ' ἄμερδεν αὐγὴ χαλκείη κορύθων ἄπο λαμπομενάων θωρήκων τε νεοσμήκτων σακέων τε φαεινῶν ἐρχομένων ἄμυδις. μάλα κεν θρασυκάρδιος εἶη ὅς τότε γηθήσειεν ἰδὼν πόνον οὐδ' ἀκάχοιτο.

191-204 = Hom. Il. 13.126-33 et 13.339-44 200 μακροῦς Hom. Il. 13.340

196 ἀσπίς δ' ἄρ' L corr. edd. (coll. Il. 13.131): ἀσπίς δ' Allen 199
φθισίμβροτος Rzach Colonna Avezzi

- 205 θαυμάσαντες δὲ καὶ ἐν τούτῳ τὸν Ὅμηρον οἱ Ἕλληνες ἐπὶ πῶν, ὡς παρὰ τὸ προσῆκον γεγονότων τῶν ἐπῶν, καὶ ἐκέλευον δίδοναι τὴν νίκην. ὁ δὲ βασιλεὺς τὸν Ἡσίοδον ἐστεφάνωσεν εἰπὼν δίκαιον εἶναι τὸν ἐπὶ γεωργίαν καὶ εἰρήνην προκαλούμενον νικᾶν, οὐ τὸν πολέμους καὶ σφαγὰς 210 διεξιόντα. τῆς μὲν οὖν νίκης οὕτω φασὶ τυχεῖν τὸν
Ἡσίοδον καὶ λαβόντα τρίποδα χαλκοῦν ἀναθεῖναι ταῖς Μούσαις ἐπιγράψαντα·
Ἡσίοδος Μούσαις Ἑλικωνίσι τόνδ' ἀνέθηκεν
ὑμνῶ νικήσας ἐν Χαλκίδι θεῖον Ὅμηρον
215 τοῦ δὲ ἀγῶνος διαλυθέντος διέπλευσεν ὁ Ἡσίοδος εἰς Δελφοὺς χρησόμενος καὶ τῆς νίκης ἀπαρχὰς τῷ θεῷ ἀναθήσων. προσερχομένου δὲ αὐτοῦ τῷ ναῷ ἔνθεον γενομένην τὴν προφῆτιν φασιν εἰπεῖν· ὄλβιος οὗτος ἀνὴρ ὃς ἐμὸν δόμον ἀμφιπολεύει, 220 Ἡσίοδος Μούσῃσι τετιμένος ἀθανάτησιν· τοῦ δ' ἦτοι κλέος ἔσται ὅσῃν τ' ἐπικίδναται ἡώς.
ἀλλὰ Διὸς πεφύλαξο Νεμείου κάλλιμον ἄλσος· κεῖθι δέ τοι θανάτοιο τέλος πεπρωμένον ἐστίν.

213-14 AP 7.53, Procl. Vit. Hom. 6, D. Chr. Or. 2.11, P.Freib. 1.1b 213 ἀνέθηκα
AP

219-23 Tz. Vita Hesiodi 166-70 Colonna

210 οὕτως West 221 τοῦ δὴ τοι L corr. Nietzsche West : τοῦ δ' ἦ τοι Allen Rzach Wilamowitz Colonna; ὅσον S Nietzsche Rzach Wilamowitz

ὁ δὲ Ἡσίοδος ἀκούσας τοῦ χρησμοῦ, τῆς Πελοποννήσου 225 μὲν ἀνεχώρει νομίσας τὴν ἐκεῖ Νεμέαν τὸν θεὸν λέγειν, εἰς δὲ Οἰνόην τῆς Λοκρίδος ἐλθὼν καταλύει παρ’ Ἀμφι-φάνει καὶ Γανύκτορι, τοῖς Φηγέως παισίν, ἀγνοήσας τὸ μαντεῖον. ὁ γὰρ τόπος οὗτος ἅπας ἐκαλεῖτο Διὸς Νεμείου ἱερόν. διατριβῆς δὲ αὐτῷ πλείονος γενομένης ἐν τοῖς 230 †Οἰνῶσιν† ὑπονοήσαντες οἱ νεανίσκοι τὴν ἀδελφὴν αὐτῶν μοιχεύειν τὸν Ἡσίοδον, ἀποκτείναντες εἰς τὸ μεταξὺ τῆς Εὐβοίας καὶ τῆς Λοκρίδος πέλαγος κατεπόντισαν. τοῦ δὲ νεκροῦ τριταίου πρὸς τὴν γῆν ὑπὸ δελφίνων προσενεχθέντος ἑορτῆς τινος ἐπιχωρίου παρ’ αὐτοῖς οὔσης Ἀριαδνεΐας 235 πάντες ἐπὶ τὸν αἰγιαλὸν ἔδραμον καὶ τὸ σῶμα γνωρίσαντες ἐκεῖνο μὲν πενθήσαντες ἔθαψαν, τοὺς δὲ φονεῖς ἀνεζήτησαν.

226-35 cf. P.Ath.Soc.Pap. inv. M2

226 Οἰνεῶνα Westermann Avezzù 230 Οἰνοεῦσιν Friedel (1878-9: 236) Allen Rzach Colonna West Οἰνεωνεῖσιν Sauppe (1850: 155) Nietzsche Avezzù Οἰνεῶσιν Goettling ἐν τῷ Οἰνεῶνι in app. Westermann 231-2 τῆς Βολίνας (vel τῆς Εὐπαλίας) καὶ τῆς Μολυκρίας in app. Nietzsche τῆς Μολυκρίας καὶ τῆς Λοκρίδος Goettling τῆς Ἀχαΐας καὶ τῆς Λοκρίδος Westermann Evelyn-White
234 Πίου ἀγνείας Nietzsche West (coll. Plu. Sept. Sap. Conv. 162e)

οἱ δὲ φοβηθέντες τὴν τῶν πολιτῶν ὀργὴν κατασπάσαντες ἀλιευτικὸν σκάφος διέπλευσαν εἰς Κρήτην. οὓς κατὰ μέσον τὸν πλοῦν ὁ Ζεὺς κεραυνώσας κατεπόντωσεν, ὥς 240 φησιν Ἀλκιδάμας ἐν Μουσείῳ. Ἐρατοσθένης δὲ φησιν ἐν ᾗ ἐνηπόδω ᾠδῇ Κτίμενον καὶ Ἀντιφον τοὺς Γανύκτορος ἐπὶ τῇ προειρημένη αἰτία ἀνελόντας σφαγιασθῆναι θεοῖς <τοῖς> ξενίοις ὑπ' Εὐρυκλέους τοῦ μάντεως. τὴν μέντοι παρθένον τὴν ἀδελφὴν τῶν προειρημένων μετὰ τὴν φθορὰν ἑαυτὴν 245 ἀναρτῆσαι, φθαρῆναι δὲ ὑπὸ τινος ξένου συνόδου τοῦ Ἡσιόδου Δημῶδους ὄνομα· ὃν καὶ αὐτὸν ἀναιρεθῆναι ὑπὸ τῶν αὐτῶν φησιν. ὕστερον δὲ Ὀρχομένιοι κατὰ χρησμὸν μετενέγκαντες αὐτὸν παρ' αὐτοῖς ἔθαψαν καὶ ἐπέγραψαν ἐπὶ τῷ τάφῳ·

250 Ἄσκη μὲν πατρὶς πολυλήιος, ἀλλὰ θανόντος ὅστέα πληξίππων γῇ Μινυῶν κατέχει Ἡσιόδου, τοῦ πλεῖστον ἐν ἀνθρώποις κλέος ἐστὶν ἀνδρῶν κρινομένων ἐν βασάνῳ σοφίης.

250-3 AP 7.54, Paus. 9.38.4, Tz. Vita Hesiodi 179-82 Colonna 251 πληξίππου γῇ Μινύης Tz. πληξίππων γῇ Μινυῶν AP Paus. 252 ἀνθρώποις κλέος ἐστὶν:
 Ἑλλάδι κῦδος ὀρεῖται Paus. 253 βασάνοις Tz.; σοφίας Paus.

241 ἐν ᾗ ἐνηπόδω ᾠδῇ Allen Colonna : ἐν Ἡσιόδῳ Goettling Nietzsche Rzach Wilamowitz Evelyn-White West ἐν Ἀνδραπόδῳ Barnes ἐν ἐνάτῃ Ὀλυμπιάδι Bernhardt (1822: 241); Γαννύκτορος L 242 <τοῖς> Bernhardt (1822: 241) 246
 δημῶδους L <Τρωίλου> Nietzsche Rzach 251 πληξίππων γῇ Μινυᾶς L corr.
 Barnes Nietzsche Wilamowitz West (coll. AP Paus.) : πληξίππος γῇ Μινυᾶς Rzach Evelyn-White

καὶ περὶ μὲν Ἡσιόδου τοσαῦτα· ὁ δὲ Ὅμηρος ἀποτυχὼν 255 τῆς νίκης περιερχόμενος ἔλεγε τὰ ποιήματα, πρῶτον μὲν τὴν Θηβαίδα ἔπη ,ζ ἥς ἡ ἀρχή· Ἄργος ἄειδε θεὰ πολυδίψιον ἔνθεν ἄνακτες· εἶτα Ἐπιγόνους ἔπη ,ζ ὧν ἡ ἀρχή· νῦν αὖθ' ὀπλοτέρων ἀνδρῶν ἀρχώμεθα Μοῦσαι.
260 φασὶ γάρ τινες καὶ ταῦτα Ὅμηρου εἶναι. ἀκούσαντες
δὲ τῶν ἐπῶν οἱ Μίδου τοῦ βασιλέως παῖδες Ξάνθος καὶ Γόργος παρακαλοῦσιν αὐτὸν ἐπίγραμμα ποιῆσαι ἐπὶ τοῦ τάφου τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτῶν, ἐφ' οὗ ἦν παρθένος χαλκῇ τὸν
Μίδου θάνατον οἰκτιζομένη. καὶ ποιεῖ οὕτως·

256 ,ξ L corr. Hermann 258 ἐπειγομένου L corr. Barnes; ξ L corr. Hermann

265 χαλκῇ παρθένος εἰμί, Μίδου δ' ἐπὶ σήματος ἦμαι.

ἔστ' ἂν ὕδωρ τε νάη καὶ δένδρεα μακρὰ τεθήλη καὶ ποταμοὶ πλήθωσι, περικλύζῃ δὲ θάλασσα, ἡέλιος δ' ἀνιῶν φαίνῃ λαμπρὰ τε σελήνη,

αὐτοῦ τῇδε μένουσα πολυκλαύτῳ ἐπὶ τύμβῳ

270 σημανέῳ παριοῦσι Μίδης ὅτι τῇδε τέθραπται.

λαβὼν δὲ παρ' αὐτῶν φιάλην ἀργυρᾶν ἀνατίθησιν ἐν

Δελφοῖς τῷ Ἀπόλλωνι, ἐπιγράψας·

Φοῖβε ἄναξ δῶρόν τοι Ὅμηρος καλὸν ἔδωκα σῆσιν ἐπιφροσύναις· σὺ δέ μοι κλέος αἰὲν ὀπάζοις.

265-70 cf. Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 11, Pl. Phdr. 264d, Favorin. Or. Cor. 38, D. Chr. 37.38, D. L. 1.89, Phlp. In Apo. 156, AP 7.153, APl. 3b.6.1 265 Μίδα Pl. AP Dio; ἐπὶ σήματος ἦμαι: ἐπὶ σήματι κεῖμαι test. cet. 266 cf. et Ps.-Longin. 36.2, S.E. M. 1.28 et 8.184, id. P. 2.37, Lib. 17.34. εὔτ' APl ὅφρ' Pl. Lib.; ῥέη Ps.-Hdt., Ps.-Longin., S.E. M., D. L., D. Chr. 267 om. Pl., Favorin., D. Chr., Phlp., AP, APl; post 268 Ps.-Hdt., D. L.; γε ῥέωσιν Ps.-Hdt., D. L.; ἀνακλύζῃ Ps.-Hdt., D. L. 268 om. Pl., Favorin., D. Chr., AP, post 266 Ps.-Hdt.; φαίνῃ: λάμπη test. cet. 269 cf. et Suda s.v. αὐτοῦ. πολυκλαύτου ἐπὶ τύμβου Ps.-Hdt., Pl. 270 cf. et Suda s.v. αὐτοῦ. σημανέω: ἀγγελέω test. cet.; Μίδας Pl., Favorin., D. L., AP, Suda 273-4 cf. et Tz. ad Lyc. 21-23 273 ἐλὼν ὁ Ὅμηρος ἔδωκα Tz. 274 ἦσιν ἐπ' εὐφροσύναις Tzetzes

265 χαλκῆ Rzach; Μιδέω Rzach

275 μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα ποιεῖ τὴν Ὀδύσσειαν ἔπη μ,β', πεποιηκῶς ἤδη τὴν Ἰλιάδα ἐπῶν μ,εφ'. παραγενόμενον δὲ ἐκεῖθεν εἰς Ἀθήνας αὐτὸν ξενισθῆναί φασι παρὰ Μέδοντι τῷ βασιλεῖ τῶν Ἀθηναίων. ἐν δὲ τῷ βουλευτηρίῳ ψύχους ὄντος καὶ πυρὸς καιομένου σχεδιάσαι λέγεται τούσδε τοὺς 280 στίχους·

ἄνδρὸς μὲν στέφανοι παῖδες, πύργοι δὲ πόλης, ἵπποι δ' αὖ πεδίου κόσμος, νῆες δὲ θαλάσσης, λαὸς δ' εἰν ἀγορῇσι καθήμενος εἰσοράσθαι.
 αἰθομένου δὲ πυρὸς γεραρώτερος οἶκος ιδέσθαι

285 ἥματι χειμερίῳ ὅπῳτ' ἂν νείφῃσι Κρονίων.

281-5 cf. Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 31, Suda s.v. Ὅμηρος 88-92 Adler 281 στέφανος Ps.- Hdt. Suda 282 ἐν πεδίῳ Ps.-Hdt. Suda; ἐν θαλάσσαις Suda; χρήματα δ' (δ' om.
 Suda) αὖξει οἶκον· ἀτὰρ γεραροὶ βασιλῆες / ἥμενοι εἰν ἀγορῇ κόσμος τ' ἄλλοισιν ὀρᾶσθαι post 282 add. Ps.-Hdt. Suda 283 om. Ps.-Hdt. Suda 285 om.
 Ps.-Hdt. Suda

275 μβφ L corr. Nietzsche 276 με L corr. Nietzsche; παραγενόμενος LSE corr.
 Westermann 281 στέφανος Wilamowitz West (coll. Ps.-Hdt. Suda); lacunam post 282 stat. Nietzsche Rzach: χρήματα δ' οἶκον ἀέξει, ἀτὰρ κοσμός βασιλῆες in app. Nietzsche χρήματα δ' οἶκον ἀέξει, ἀτὰρ γεραροὶ βασιλῆες suppl.
 Rzach 283 λαοῖς εἰν ἀγορῇσι καθήμενοι Nietzsche Rzach ἐκεῖθεν δὲ παραγενόμενος εἰς Κόρινθον ἐρραψώδει τὰ ποιήματα. τιμηθεὶς δὲ μεγάλως παραγίνεται εἰς Ἄργος καὶ λέγει ἐκ τῆς Ἰλιάδος τὰ ἔπη τάδε·

- οἱ δ' Ἄργος τ' εἶχον Τίρυνθά τε τειχιόεσσαν 290 Ἑρμιόνην τ' Ἀσίνην τε, βαθὺν κατὰ κόλπον ἐχούσας, Τροϊζῆν' Ἠϊόνας τε καὶ ἀμπελόεντ' Ἐπίδauρον νῆσόν τ' Αἴγιναν Μάσητά τε κοῦροι Ἀχαιῶν, τῶν αὖθ' ἡγεμόνευε βοὴν ἀγαθὸς Διομήδης Τυδεΐδης οὗ πατρὸς ἔχων μένος Οἰνεΐδαο, 295 καὶ Σθένελος, Καπανῆος ἀγακλειτοῦ φίλος υἱός· τοῖσι δ' ἄμ' Εὐρύπυλος τρίτατος κίεν ισόθεος φώς, Μηκιστέως υἱὸς Ταλαϊονίδαο ἄνακτος.
ἐκ πάντων δ' ἡγεῖτο βοὴν ἀγαθὸς Διομήδης.
τοῖσι δ' ἄμ' ὀγδώκοντα μέλαινα νῆες ἔποντο·
300 ἐν δ' ἄνδρες πολέμοιο δαήμονες ἐστιχόωντο
Ἀργεῖοι λινοθώρηκες, κέντρα πτολέμοιο.

289-93 + 295-9 cf. Hom. Il. 2.559-68 292 οἱ τ' ἔχον Αἴγιναν Il. 2.562 (cf. et Hes fr. 204.47) 294 om. Hom. 296 Εὐρύαλος Il. 2.565 298 συμπάντων Il. 2.567 300-1 om. Hom. 301 cf. AP 14.73.6

292 οἱ τ' ἔχον Αἴγιναν S in marg. (coll. Il. 2.562); Αἴγιναν τε Μάσητά L 296 Εὐρύαλος Wilamowitz (coll. Il. 2.565) 297 Μηκιστέος Rzach

τῶν δὲ Ἀργείων οἱ προεστηκότες ὑπερβολῇ χαρέντες ἐπὶ τῷ ἐγκωμιάζεσθαι τὸ γένος αὐτῶν ὑπὸ τοῦ ἐνδο-ξοτάτου τῶν ποιητῶν, αὐτὸν μὲν πολυτελέσι δωρεαῖς 305 ἐτίμησαν, εἰκόνα δὲ χαλκῇν ἀναστήσαντες ἐψηφίσαντο θυσίαν ἐπιτελεῖν Ὀμήρῳ καθ' ἡμέραν καὶ κατὰ μῆνα καὶ κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν <καὶ> ἄλλην θυσίαν πενταετηρίδα εἰς Χίον ἀποστέλλειν. ἐπιγράφουσι δὲ ἐπὶ τῆς εἰκόνης αὐτοῦ· θεῖος Ὀμηρος ὃδ' ἐστὶν ὃς Ἑλλάδα τὴν μεγάλαυχον 310 πᾶσαν ἐκόσμησεν καλλιπεῖ σοφίῃ, ἔξοχα δ' Ἀργείους, οἱ τὴν θεοτειχέα Τροίην ἤρριψαν ποινὴν ἠϋκόμου Ἑλένης.
 οὗ χάριν ἔστησεν δῆμος μεγαλόπολις αὐτὸν ἐνθάδε καὶ τιμαῖς ἀμφέπει ἀθανάτων.

309-12 cf. P.Duk. inv. 665 311 θεοτειχέα: .ριαυχεα P.Duk. inv. 665 (ἐριαυχέα Menci)

307 <καὶ> Westermann : ἄλλην δὲ θυσίαν Hermann Boissonade, ἀλλὰ καὶ θυσίαν Wilamowitz 309 μεγαλαύχην L corr. Barnes 310 καλλιπεῖ σοφίῃ τε L corr. S in marg. 312 ποινῆς L corr. Barnes 313 ἔστησε ... μεγαλόπολις L corr. S supra lineam

315 ἐνδιατρίψας δὲ τῇ πόλει χρόνον τινὰ διέπλευσεν εἰς Δῆλον εἰς τὴν πανήγυριν. καὶ σταθεὶς ἐπὶ τὸν κεράτινον βωμὸν λέγει ὕμνον εἰς Ἀπόλλωνα οὗ ἡ ἀρχή· μνήσομαι οὐδὲ λάθωμαι Ἀπόλλωνος ἐκάτοιο.

ῥηθέντος δὲ τοῦ ὕμνου οἱ μὲν Ἴωνες πολίτην αὐτὸν κοινὸν 320 ἐποιήσαντο, Δῆλιοι δὲ γράψαντες τὰ ἔπη εἰς λεύκωμα ἀνέθηκαν ἐν τῷ τῆς Ἀρτέμιδος ἱερῷ. τῆς δὲ πανηγύρεως λυθείσης ὁ ποιητὴς εἰς Ἴον ἔπλευσε πρὸς Κρεόφυλον κακεῖ χρόνον διέτριβε πρεσβύτης ὢν ἤδη. ἐπὶ δὲ τῆς θαλάσσης καθήμενος παίδων τινῶν ἀφ' ἀλείας ἐρχομένων ὥς φασι 325 πυθόμενος·

ἄνδρες ἀπ' Ἀρκαδίας θηρήτορες ἧ ῥ' ἔχομέν τι;

318 h.Ap. 1 326 cf. Procl. Vit. Hom. 5, Anon. Vit. Hom. 2.3, Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.5, Tz.
Exeg. in Il. 37. ἀλήτορες Anon. Vit. Hom. 2.3, Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.5, Tz.; ἄρ' Procl.

322 Κρεόφυλον L Wilamowitz : Κρεώφυλον edd. cet. 326 ἀπ' Ἀρκαδίας:
ἄγρης ἀλῆς Koechly (1857: 222) Evelyn-White εἰπόντων δὲ ἐκείνων·

ὅσσ' ἔλομεν λιπόμεσθα, ὅσ' οὐχ ἔλομεν φερόμεσθα, οὐ νοήσας τὸ λεχθὲν ἤρετο αὐτοὺς ὅ τι λέγοιεν. οἱ δὲ φασιν 330 ἐν ἀλείᾳ μὲν ἀγρεῦσαι μηδέν, ἐφθειρίσθαι δέ, καὶ τῶν φθειρῶν οὓς ἔλαβον καταλιπεῖν, οὓς δὲ οὐκ ἔλαβον ἐν τοῖς ἱματίοις φέρειν. ἀναμνησθεὶς δὲ τοῦ μαντείου ὅτι τὸ τέλος αὐτοῦ ἦκοι τοῦ βίου, ποιεῖ τὸ τοῦ τάφου αὐτοῦ ἐπίγραμμα.
ἀναχωρῶν δὲ ἐκεῖθεν, ὄντος πηλοῦ ὀλισθῶν καὶ πεσὼν ἐπὶ 335 τὴν πλευράν, τριταῖος ὥς φασι τελευτᾷ· καὶ ἐτάφη ἐν Ἰω.
ἔστι δὲ τὸ ἐπίγραμμα τόδε· ἐνθάδε τὴν ἱερὴν κεφαλὴν κατὰ γαῖα καλύπτει, ἀνδρῶν ἡρώων κοσμήτορα θεῖον Ὅμηρον.

327-38 cf. P.Mich. inv. 2754 ll. 1-14

328 cf. P.Mich. inv. 2754 ll. 2-3, Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 35, Procl. Vit. Hom. 5, Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.6, Anon. Vit. Hom. 2.3, Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.5, Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 1.4, Suda s.v. Ὅμηρος 206 Adler. ἄσσ' ἔλομεν ... ἃ δ' οὐχ ἔλομεν Ps.-Hdt. Suda, οὓς ἔλομεν ... οὓς δ' οὐχ ἔλομεν Procl., ὅσσ' ἔλομεν ... ὅσσ' οὐχ ἔλομεν Ps.-Plu., ἄσσ' ἔλομεν ... ἄσσ' οὐχ ἔλομεν Anon. Vit. Hom. 1., ὅσσ' ἔλομεν ... ὅσα δ' οὐχ ἔλομεν Anon. Vit. Hom. 2 Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.

337-8. P.Mich. inv. 2754 ll. 11-12, AP 7.3, Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 36, Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 1.4, Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.6, Anon. Vit. Hom. 2.3, Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.5, Suda s.v. Ὅμηρος 54-5 et 220-221 Adler, Tz. Exeg. in Il. 37 338 καλύψεν Ps.-Hdt., κάλυψε P.Mich. inv. 2754.

4. Commentary

The text of the Certamen has been transmitted with no author name and no date of composition. The only element that can be used to date the text is a mention of the emperor Hadrian, who is said to interrogate the Pythia about Homer's origins. The episode may have been inserted in the narrative when the memory of Hadrian's actual visit to Delphi, in 125 AD, was still fresh (32-43n.), and in any case provides a terminus post quem.

Although the text as we have it was composed during the imperial times, or later still, the core of the narrative goes back to the fourth-century sophist Alcidamas. Two verses uttered by Homer in the Certamen are attributed by Stobaeus to Alcidamas, and P.Petr. I 25 proves that these verses were connected to the story of the contest of Homer and Hesiod by the third century BC (78-9n.). Furthermore, Alcidamas is mentioned as one of the sources for the death of Hesiod at 240, and P.Mich. inv. 2754 (see pp. 70-80) shows that Alcidamas told the story of Homer's death in a version similar to that in the Certamen. At the heart of the Certamen there is an elaborate narrative structure that presents the two poets according to parallel patterns and depicts a nexus (oracle-contest-death) that may well have already been present in one of the Certamen's literary sources, quite possibly Alcidamas (56-62n.).

However, Alcidamas probably did not invent the story of the contest between the two poets, and was certainly not the first author of some of the verses in the Certamen. Two lines mentioned in the Certamen are also found in Aristophanes' Peace vv. 1282-3; the appearance of these verses in this play, performed for the first time in 421 BC, shows that at least some of the hexameter material included in our text predates Alcidamas and was perhaps already connected to the story of the contest of Homer and Hesiod in Aristophanes' times (107-8n.). The author of the Certamen also knows traditions that were widely circulating in the sixth-fifth century BC. For example, Heraclitus referred to the episode of Homer's death (323-38n.) and Thucydides is the earliest witness of the legend surrounding Hesiod's (215-23n.).

Some of the verses at 107-37, the 'ambivalent propositions', seem to represent fifth-century BC concerns about Homeric language and can be associated with sophistic circles, as does the syntax of this section (102-37n.). The verses at 148-75 also deal with topics that stem from fifth- and fourth-century philosophical and political discourse. The narrative framework surrounding the contest seems to foster the image of Homer as a democratic poet, which again would fit a fifth- or fourth-century BC context (276-85n.).

The work opens by mentioning Homer and Hesiod as (apparently) equal, but the two poets are quickly set in contrast to each other. The first difference the text underlines involves their place of origin: while Hesiod mentioned his own birthplace, Homer's silence on the matter inspired a big debate and a wide range of local claims (1-8). Similarly, there is no certainty in respect to his parents. The text thus gives a list of seven alleged fathers and mothers (18-27n.). This sets the scene for claiming Homer as a Panhellenic poet, a claim that becomes explicit later in the text, where Homer's poetry is said to appeal to all the Greeks (90-1n.).

Once the contest begins, Homer appears as the champion of Greek traditional values, and thereby gains general approval from the public. Homer is able to define what the best and the finest thing are for mortals in terms conformed to dominant Greek views (75-89), and to solve a theological impropriety put in the form of an aporia (96-101), while Hesiod's reaction to his success worsens as the contest proceeds (94n.). Perhaps the most impressive poetic enterprise Homer embarks on during the contest is in reply to Hesiod's 'ambivalent propositions', a series of verses that propose unacceptable views on issues such as the life and behavior of heroes and gods, and which Homer turns into expressions of standard Greek morality. When, in another stage of the competition, Homer demonstrates his expertise on topics that were traditionally considered Hesiodic, he appears to be the inevitable winner of the competition (151-75). However, King Panoides makes a surprising appearance in the text and asks both poets to perform what they consider the finest passage from their poetry (176-9).

Homer's performance makes him appear to be a truly divinely inspired poet, as he enables humans to share, through poetry, the gaze of the gods, while viewing something that they could not bear in reality: war and death. Hesiod, with his description of the cycle of nature and agriculture, does not offer anything that a man cannot experience in his everyday life (180-204n.). Nonetheless Panoides decides that Hesiod should win on the basis that he celebrates peace. As happens in other versions of the story, however, Hesiod's victory is not at all strongly endorsed in the text (205-10n.). Furthermore, Homer seems to be presented as younger than Hesiod and therefore arguably less expert: during the discussion of the relative chronology of the two poets there seems to be an implicit preference for the version according to which Homer was born a long time after Hesiod, making it perhaps even impossible for them to meet and compete (44-55n.); and in any case Homer is said to have composed only the Margites before competing against Hesiod (55n.).

After the contest, Hesiod is never said to compose new poetry or to travel Greece to perform his works; he only visits Delphi to dedicate the tripod, and to Locris, after misunderstanding an oracle, in an attempt to escape his fate (224-53n.).

By contrast, Homer's artistic production starts, in fact, after the contest. After the comic Margites, he composes two cyclic poems (255-60n.), then the Iliad and the Odyssey (275-6n.) and finally the Hymn to Apollo (315-21n.). This list does not include all the titles attributed to Homer in antiquity, but selects significant examples for each kind of poem linked to him and builds to a climax: the works that were considered of lower status in antiquity are located in the initial phases of his career, and through the Hymn to Apollo the poet is finally consecrated as a Panhellenic poet whose fame will last for evermore. Homer also composes the funeral epigram for the Phrygian king Midas, a dedication to Apollo engraved on a silver cup (260-74), and the verses recited at Athens before king Medon (276-85). The composition of each of these works is not always connected to a specific city, and Homer is consistently depicted as a travelling poet (56n.). As he goes round Greece performing his poems, the honours he receives increase. At Argos, for example, he is made the object of a cult, and sacrifices are established in his honour (302-8n.). At Delos for the first time, Homer performs in a Panionian context and his success on this occasion results in the attribution to him of the title of 'common citizen' of all the Ionians (315-21n.).

Homer's success brings about a complete reversal of the verdict of the competition, and compensates Homer for it: the Midas episode (260-74), for example, involves an invitation by the sons of another king, a silver cup, and a dedication to Apollo, in a mirror image of the honours Hesiod secured through winning the contest. Later on, Homer also receives 'costly gifts', which parallel the gifts offered by the organisers of the poetic contest that Homer lost (304-5n.).

The prophecy concerning Homer's death, like Hesiod's, is finally fulfilled while the poet is in Ios. But unlike Hesiod, Homer is never said to misunderstand the oracle, and even his inability to solve a riddle proposed by some boys, which was the basis for some early criticism of Homer's alleged wisdom, is not emphasised as an outright failing (323-38n.). The work closes with a funerary epigram for the divine Homer, composed by the poet himself.

Title: the title of the work in the manuscript gives an exhaustive description of the contents of the work. The title Certamen Homeri et Hesiodi, with which the work is commonly known, comes from a Latin translation of the shortened form of the title (Ὅμηρου καὶ Ἡσιόδου ἀγών) and goes back to the editio princeps.

1-2. Ὅμηρον ... λέγεσθαι: the opening sentence elevates Homer and Hesiod

above all other poets (for the possibility that other versions of the story of the contest may have given more prominence to other participants, see Introduction on Plutarch, Dinner of the Seven Sages 153f-154a, pp. 18-28). But although Homer and Hesiod are formally presented as equal poets, the description offered fits Homer and subsumes Hesiod as his companion: θειότατος and in fact θεῖος are standard epithets of Homer but not of Hesiod; similarly, there is discussion and controversy only about Homer's birthplace because – as the text admits at 2-6 – Hesiod names his own place of origin. The overall effect of the opening sentence is to present Homer as the privileged poet in the pair, and that is indeed how he will be described at many points in the narrative: the Certamen draws on and endorses the traditional image of Homer as the divine poet par excellence in Greek literature (see esp. 180-204n.); Homer is explicitly called θεῖος at 214, 309 and 338. The opening is geared towards Homer to such an extent that West 1967: 444 suggests that the author might have taken an opening of a lost Life of Homer and simply adapted it to his own work. West tentatively reconstructs the sentence as follows: Ὅμηρον τὸν θειότατον ποιητὴν πάντες ἄνθρωποι πολίτην ἴδιον εὖχονται λέγεσθαι. But the author of the Certamen may, just as easily, have thought of Homer as generally depicted in many ancient Lives, and adapted the description to include Hesiod. The superlative θειότατοι is used of Homer and Hesiod together only here in extant Greek literature. The epithet θειότατος is rarely given to Homer (only a few occurrences: e.g. Pl. Ion 530 b) but never to Hesiod alone. Θεῖος is a standard epithet of Homer, and θεῖος Ὅμηρος a hexametric formula (Skiadas 1965: 63-75, Burkert 1987: 44, Graziosi 2002: 67), but is applied to Hesiod only once (Plut. The Obsolescence of Oracles 431e). The claim that all men wish that both poets were said to be their fellow citizens suits, once again, only Homer (see e.g. Eust. Il. 4.17; Isaac Porphyrogenitus Praefatio in Homerum 4 Kindstrand).

2. λέγεσθαι: the popular emendation γενέσθαι does not account for the fact that the biographical material was perceived as fictional already in antiquity. In order for a city to make its local tradition successful, the poet should persuasively ‘be said’ to be – not necessarily ‘be born’ – a fellow citizen.

2-4. ἀλλ’ Ἡσίοδος ... ὁ πατὴρ αὐτοῦ: the contrast between Homer and Hesiod is now explicitly put in biographical terms: the statement that Hesiod precluded any rivalry by mentioning his birthplace in his work clearly engages with the standard claim in Homeric biographies that Homer’s silence about himself occasioned a big debate about his life (see e.g. Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 1.1; Procl. Vit. Hom. 2; Eust. Il. 4.17). For the contrast established here between Homer and Hesiod, cf. also Vell. Pat. 1.7.1: Hesiodus ... qui uitauit ne in id quod Homerus incideret, patriamque et parentes testatus est. West 1967: 444 posits a common source, but both the Certamen and Velleius may be responding to a wide-spread trope or idea.

5-6. εἶσατο ... ἐσθλῇ: = Op. 639-40. The Certamen exploits the practice, common in the ancient Lives, to draw information about the life of a poet from his/her own work. For other biographical anecdotes on Hesiod derived from the Theogony or Works and Days see most recently Kivilo 2010: 7-61, Koning 2010: 31-2, 38-9 and Lefkowitz 2012: 6-13. Although these lines are not quoted in other Hesiodic biographies, they had undisputed influence on the matter of Hesiod’s birthplace. They are echoed in Tz. Life of Hesiod 80-1 Colonna (οἱ (scil. Hesiod’s parents) ... τὴν ἑαυτῶν πατρίδα Κύμην ἀφέντες μεταναστεύουσιν ἐπὶ τὴν Ἄσκηρον, χωρίον τῶν Βοιωτῶν δυσχέιμερον καὶ κακοθέρειον, περὶ τοὺς πόδας κειμένην τοῦ Ἑλικῶνος). They feature in many other works (see West 1978: 126. apparatus on Op. 639-40) and are in fact memorable – partly because it is an unusual rhetorical move to disparage one’s own place of origin.

5. εἶσατο: the Hesiodic manuscripts and the other testimonia read νάσσατο. Despite a minor slip in the manuscript (L reads εἶσατο, from εἶμι, emended by S in εἶσατο, from ἴζω – a near synonym of the Hesiodic reading) the Certamen clearly preserves an otherwise unattested variant reading of Op. 639.

7-8. Ὅμηρον δὲ ... λέγουσιν: this claim makes Homer a Panhellenic poet, a view that is endorsed also, and more explicitly, later in the text. It is in fact one of the most salient features of Homer as portrayed in the Certamen: see esp. 91n., 176 and 205, where Homer is said to appeal to ‘the Greeks’ or indeed ‘all the Greeks’; and the episodes told at 286-338. This claim is based on the view, common at least from the imperial era, that the endless debate on Homer’s origins makes him the possession of every city. See e.g. Procl. Vit. Hom. 2 and Heraclit. All. 76.8-9.

8-17. καὶ πρῶτοί ... τὸν Μαργίτην: the text claims that all cities wanted to be considered Homer’s hometown, but then mentions only three. The number is small but the list includes the cities that were generally recognised as having the strongest and most ancient claims about Homer’s origins: Smyrna, Chios and Colophon. These are mentioned at the beginning of the list of Homer’s alleged birthplaces in most of the ancient biographies and in other literary works (Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 1.4 (= AP 16.296) and 2.2; Procl. Vit. Hom. 2; Suda s.v. Ὅμηρος 2; Anon. Vit. Hom. 2.2; Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.1; Lucianus VH 2.20; AP 16.298). Because of the wide circulation of this triad the author of the Certamen may have made his selection without the help of any specific source (contra West 1967: 445 who suggests a fourth-century source because other birthplaces, which are attested later, are missing in this list). Connections between Homer and these three cities are very old and in fact go back to three passages in the Homeric corpus itself (analysed in Graziosi 2002: 62-79): the Hymn to Apollo (172-3) introduces the figure of the Chian blind man, whom already Thucydides (3.104) identified with Homer; in the Margites (fr. 1 West) the old divine singer who came to Colophon is characterised in a way that fits the traditional descriptions of Homer; finally, in the Hymn to Artemis 9 there is a possible reference to the legend of Homer’s birth by the river Meles near Smyrna. Nagy 2004 suggests that Athens, as the Ionian metropolis, had an interest in stressing the importance of Chios, Smyrna and Colophon. These and other local traditions also appear elsewhere in the text: Ithaca at 23-27 and 37-40 (some of the alleged parents and the Pythia's response to Hadrian); Ios at 59-60 (the Pythia to Homer); Smyrna at 75 and 151 (Homer is called 'son of Meles'); Chios again at 307-8 (the Argives send periodical sacrifices to Chios in Homer's honour).

8-12. καὶ πρῶτοί ... προσηγορίαν: the Smyranean tradition about Homer was very well known in the classical period (Stesimbr. 107 F 22; Pi. fr. 264 S.-M.; Eugaion 535 F 2 = 2 Fowler; Critias fr. 50 D.-K.), and it seems likely that legends about Homer circulated in Smyrna before Alyattes' destruction of that city in 600 BC (Jakoby 1933: 31, Graziosi 2002: 75). The Hymn to Artemis 9, which seems to connect Homer with Smyrna via the river Meles, may also be dated to the same period (West 2003: 17). Beecroft 2010: 75 argues attractively that between its destruction in 600 BC and its rebuilding in the Hellenistic era Smyrna was the ideal place for Homer's birth in that everyone could accept it because it belonged to no-one. It is certainly true that the Smyranean tradition contained some of the most common features of Homer's persona, accepted also in other local claims: Homer's original name Melesigenes; the epithet υἱὲ Μέλητος, interestingly used for Homer also in an epigram aiming to prove that Homer was a Colophonian (Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 1.4 = AP 16.292); the very birth of Homer in Smyrna, accepted in the traditions of Ios and Cyme (Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 1.2 and 3). Smyrna's special place in the tradition also explains why in the Certamen it is mentioned first (note also πρῶτοι, l. 8).

9-10. Μέλητος ὄντα ... Κρηϊθίδος νύμφης: the parental couple Cretheis-Meles is among the most widely attested for Homer. In the ancient sources Meles is paired only with Cretheis, but Cretheis could also be paired with Maion (Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 2.2 and Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.3). The presence in the Odyssey of a similar story (Poseidon rapes Tyro disguised as the river Enipeus, Od. 11.235-52) may have a bearing on the success of this anecdote; it seems also relevant that Tyro is said to marry Cretheus, a son of Aeolus, whose name is very similar to Cretheis'. The similarity between the two stories was certainly seen by Philostratus (Im. 2.8). The River Meles is the father of Homer also in Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 2.2; Castricius of Nicaea in Suda s.v. Ὅμηρος 1; Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.3; Anon. Vit. Hom. 2.1; Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.1; in other sources it is the place where Cretheis gave birth to the poet (Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 2-3; Procl. Vit. Hom. 3). Both versions are attested already in the fifth century BC (Meles as Homer's father: Critias fr. 50 D.-K., Eugaion 535 F 2 = Cert. 20-21; Homer born by the River Meles: Stesimbr. 107 F 22). The author of the Certamen perhaps uses the former version of the legend because it was the one that best illustrated the Smyrneans' claim about Homer: the mere fact that Homer was born in Smyrna is not sufficient to prove his Smyranean origins: Ephorus and Aristotle (Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 1.2 and 3) claim that Homer was born by the River Meles in Smyrna, but only because Cretheis, who was from either Cyme or Ios, had to leave her city after becoming pregnant. According to them, the poet is therefore a native of Cyme or Ios (as also Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 2.2; Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.2 and 3; Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.1). By accepting this version of the story the Certamen can later report a genealogy of Homer according to which he is the son of Meles (53) and have Hesiod address Homer as υἱὲ Μέλητος Ὅμηρε during the contest section (75 and 151): all these details strengthen the image of Homer as a divine poet. Both Meles and Cretheis are mentioned later in the text in the list of Homer's alleged fathers and mothers respectively (21 and 24) and although they are mentioned separately, there too we are probably meant to see them as a couple (see 18-27n.). Meles is also given as one of Homer's alleged original names at ll. 27-28.

10. Κρηϊθίδος: the manuscript form Κρηϊθίδος has been unanimously emended on the basis of Κρηθηίδος at l. 24. The form in l. 24 is one of the best attested in the manuscripts of other biographies, as S indicates ('confirmatur ab aliis'). However, other different spellings of the name are transmitted elsewhere too: emendations force a unified tradition that never existed, especially in the case of proper names (see also on Melesigenes, below).

κεκλήσθαι φασι πρότερον Μελησιγενῆ: as in the case of the name of Cretheis (above), the two different manuscript forms for Melesigenes are kept (here and at 28). That the original name of Homer was Melesigenes, explained as ‘Born by the River Meles’ or ‘Born of the River Meles’, is a common feature of all Homeric biographies. The etymology has no linguistic basis (see e.g. Wilamowitz 1916b: 370, Marx 1925: 406-8). Maass 1911 suggests that the name Melesigenes means that the poet was born during the Melesia, a festival in honour of Meles (which however is not attested); more convincingly, Marx suggests that the real meaning of Melesigenes is ‘he who takes care of his people’ (‘born of/by the Meles’ being actually Μελητογένη), and this suited the rhapsodes who sometimes claimed to be Homer’s descendants (Graziosi 2002: 75 n. 72). The connection with the river Meles must have been created in order to support the Smyrneans’ claim and the popular etymology will have spread together with the Smyranean traditions about Homer. However, the manuscripts of other Homeric biographies also testify to forms of the name that show its versatility, and this may have played a role in its wide diffusion: the variants Μελισσογενής or Μελισσογενῆ and Μελιτογενής (cf. e.g. Allen’s apparatus of Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. on ll. 54 and 64, and more significantly that of Anon. Vit. Hom. 2 on l. 4) seem to connect this name with the words μέλι or μέλισσα (‘honey’ and ‘bee’, common symbols for poetry and poets; cf. also Eust. Od. 1713.17, where honey is said to flow from Homer’s mouth), rather than to a specific place. Fluctuation between -ησ- and -ισσ- is also attested for two other ‘original’ names of Homer, Μελησιάνναξ (Anon. Vit. Hom. 2.1) and Μελησαγόρας (Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.5). Of these, only Melesigenes features in the list of alleged original names at 28.

11-12. Melesigenes changes his name into Homer after becoming blind, because ὄμηρος is a common term for blind people in the Aeolian dialect: this is another very well known and widely spread piece of information on the poet (see also Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 13; Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.5; Anon. Vit. Hom. 2.1). It is again based on folk etymology (cf. 10n.): the word ὄμηρος is not in fact attested with the meaning ‘blind’ in extant Greek literature. The etymologizing explanation connects the poet with a quintessential feature of his work: on Homer’s blindness as a sign of his closeness to the gods see esp. Graziosi 2002: 138-63. Other ancient sources dismiss the link between the name Homer and blindness (perhaps because they did not accept that ὄμηρος meant blind, or because they denied the very fact that Homer was blind) and on the basis of an independently attested meaning of the word ὄμηρος claim that Melesigenes was called Homer because he was taken hostage (Procl. Vit. Hom. 3; Suda s.v. Ὀμηρος 3; Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.5). The Certamen knows and mentions this alternative view (see 29-32n.) but without expressing any preference. However, Beecroft 2011: 9 notes that Homer in the Certamen is never said to write, which may suggest that according to this text he was indeed blind.

13-15. Χῖοι δὲ ... Ὀμηρίδας καλουμένους: Chian traditions about Homer are well attested in Greek literature and from ancient times (Simon. fr. 19 West, Anaximen. 72 F 30, Damastes fr. 11 Fowler, Pi. fr. 264 S.-M., Theoc. Id. 7.47 and 22.218). This passage of the Certamen mentions its most common features: the Homeridae as Homer’s descendants, and their connection with Chios. The link between the Homeridae and Chios is attested already in the classical period: Acusilaos and Hellanicus in Harp. O 19 Keaney: Ὀμηρίδαι· Ἰσοκράτης Ἑλένη (10.65). Ὀμηρίδαι γένος ἐν Χίῳ, ὅπερ Ἀκουσίλαος ἐν γ’ (2 F 2). Ἑλλάνικος ἐν τῇ Ἀτλαντιάδι (4 F 20) ἀπὸ τοῦ ποιητοῦ φησιν ὠνομάσθαι. Pace Fehling 1979: 198, who claims that there was no connection between Chios and the Homeridae, this and the following passage clearly link the two. A scholion to Pindar draws a connection between the Homeridae and Chios and also refers to their kinship with Homer: Schol. Pi. Nem. 2.1 Drachmann: Ὀμηρίδας ἔλεγον τὸ μὲν ἀρχαῖον τοὺς ἀπὸ τοῦ Ὀμήρου γένους οἱ καὶ τὴν ποίησιν αὐτοῦ ἐκ διαδοχῆς ἦδον· μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα καὶ οἱ ῥαψῳδοὶ οὐκέτι τὸ γένος εἰς Ὀμηρον ἀνάγοντες. The expression ἐκ διαδοχῆς, intended as ‘by right of succession’ (Burkert 1979: 54; Graziosi 2002: 214), refers to a genealogical connection with Homer, though, as pointed out most recently by Collins 2004: 183, it can also be interpreted as ‘by relay’, with reference to a continuous performance of the Homeric verses. The words οἱ ῥαψῳδοὶ οὐκέτι τὸ γένος εἰς Ὅμηρον ἀνάγοντες seem to imply that in later times a rhapsode who was not a descendant of Homer’s could also be called a Homerid. Some ancient scholars questioned the Homeridae’s descent from Homer (Harp. ibid.: Σέλευκος δὲ ἐν β’ περὶ βίων ἀμαρτάνειν φησὶ Κράτητα νομίζοντα ἐν ταῖς Ἱεροποιαῖς Ὀμηρίδας ἀπογόνους εἶναι τοῦ ποιητοῦ· ὠνομάσθησαν γὰρ ἀπὸ τῶν ὁμήρων...). Nevertheless, it is clear that our text drew on a very well attested tradition, which is also found in one of the ancient Homeric biographies: in Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 25 Homer married a woman in Chios and had two daughters, one of which died unmarried while the other married a Chian man. It must have been easy for ancient readers acquainted with this material to see in these lines a reference to the Homeridae (contra West 1999: 372; for the use of the Homeridae as evidence for Homer’s Chian origins see Str. 14.1.35.21: ἀμφισβητοῦσι δὲ καὶ Ὀμήρου Χῖοι, μαρτύριον μέγα τοὺς Ὀμηρίδας καλουμένους ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐκείνου γένους προχειριζόμενοι; Eust. Il. 4.17: ἀμφισβητοῦσι δ’ αὐτοῦ καὶ Χῖοι μαρτύριον προχειριζόμενοι τοὺς καλουμένους Ὀμηρίδας ὧν καὶ Πίνδαρος μέμνηται). The Homeridae seem to have been personally involved in the making of Homer’s biographical legends: Isoc. Hel. 65 testifies to their activity in this respect; Eustathius says that the Homeridae hesitated to mention that Homer was defeated by Hesiod in a poetic contest (see Introduction on Eustathius, pp. 51-2). The idea that Homer was from Chios probably became predominant in fifth- and fourth-century Athens precisely thanks to the Homeridae and their connection with the Peisistratids.

15-17. Κολοφώνιοι δὲ ... Μαργίτην: Homer’s Colophonian origins are attested also by Nicander (fr. 14 Schneider) and Antimachus (fr. 130 Wyss = 166 Matthews). Colophon has ancient claims to Homer, and they are probably connected with Margites fr. 1 West (for a good survey of the problems related to this fragment and a discussion of its role in the Margites see Gostoli 2007: 20-3 and 71-4). That the Margites played a key role in the Colophonian tradition is evident also in this section of the Certamen; though our text chooses to present it as the first work of a young Homer (thus dissociating him from the old singer of Margites fr. 1 West). This way of dating the Margites in relation to Homer's other works is common in the imperial period, when its authenticity was often questioned and at times strongly denied. Moreover, it fits the way Homer features in the rest of the Certamen and seems to have an apologetic function. The attribution of the Margites to Homer seems to have been accepted from the time of Archilochus (Archil. fr. 303 West apud Eustr. in EN 6.7 = Margites T1 Gostoli; see Gostoli 2007: 11-13 on this difficult testimony) to at least the fourth century BC (Arist. Po. 1448b24-1449a1 = Margites T3 Gostoli). In later times, when Homer was strictly and solely associated with the Iliad and the Odyssey, the Margites was considered the work of a young and immature Homer (D. Chr. 53.4 = T6 Gostoli: δοκεῖ γὰρ καὶ τοῦτο (scil. τὸν Μαργίτην) τὸ ποίημα ὑπὸ Ὀμήρου γεγονέναι νεωτέρου καὶ ἀποπειρωμένου τῆς αὐτοῦ φύσεως πρὸς ποίησιν) and was gradually excluded from the Homeric corpus, together with other works (Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 1.5: ἔγραψε δὲ ποιήματα δύο, Ἰλιάδα καὶ Ὀδύσειαν· ὡς δὲ τινες, οὐκ ἀληθῶς λέγοντες, γυμνασίας καὶ παιδιᾶς ἔνεκα καὶ Βατραχομομαχίαν προσθεῖς καὶ Μαργίτην; Procl. Vit. Hom. 9: γέγραφε δὲ ποιήσεις δύο, Ἰλιάδα καὶ Ὀδύσειαν ... προστιθέασι δὲ αὐτῷ καὶ παίγνια τινὰ· Μαργίτην, Βατραχομαχίαν...; Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.3: οὐδὲν δ' αὐτοῦ θετέον ἔξω τῆς Ἰλιάδος καὶ τῆς Ὀδυσσεΐας, ἀλλὰ τοὺς ὕμνους καὶ τὰ λοιπὰ τῶν εἰς αὐτὸν ἀναφερομένων ποιημάτων ἡγητέον ἀλλότρια καὶ τῆς φύσεως καὶ τῆς δυνάμεως ἔνεκα. τινὲς δ' αὐτοῦ φασιν εἶναι καὶ ... τὴν τε Βατραχομομαχίαν καὶ τὸν Μαργίτην). In the Certamen, the position of the Margites in Homer's career helps to mitigate his defeat, for there seems to be a suggestion that he composed only that work before competing against Hesiod (55n.): Homer composed the Margites as his first work (ποιῆσαι πρῶτον τὸν Μαργίτην); after that, he went round from town to town reciting poetry (ποιήσαντα γὰρ τὸν Μαργίτην Ὅμηρον περιέρχεσθαι κατὰ πόλιν ῥαψωδοῦντα); around the same time (κατὰ δὲ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον) Ganymed organizes the contest.

18-27. περὶ δὲ ... τὴν Νέστορος: the text lists seven alleged fathers and seven mothers for Homer, many of which are otherwise unknown. The number seven is also used to control the sprawling tradition about Homer's birthplaces (e.g. AP 16.297-8). Sources for the names are indicated only in a few cases, and only in relation to the fathers. Some mothers quite clearly seem to match the fathers in the same order so as to form couples attested by external evidence (Maion-Metis; Meles-Cretheis; Masagoras-Themite; Telemachus-Polycaste): that may help to explain the lack of authorities for the mothers. Some of these characters are explicitly paired up in Suda s.v. Ὅμηρος 1, that reports a similar list. But it is not possible to prove that the two separate lists derive in fact from one list in which the names were paired (as suggested by West 1967: 445): we do not know enough about the remaining characters to speculate about the legends circulating about them. As far as we can tell, the lists offer a fairly comprehensive overview of the tradition by alluding to several of its main branches (Smyranean, Cypriot, Egyptian and Ithacan claims are all recognizable). The lists seem to be carefully structured: they start off by referring to the best-known traditions and their characters (Smyrna: Maion, Meles, Metis, Cretheis; Cyprus: Masagoras, Themite) and conclude with less common and at the same time more striking names (Telemachus, Calliope, Polycaste). It is not possible to identify the source for these lists but Tzetzes (Alleg. 59-66 Boissonade) and Suda s.v. Ὅμηρος 1 transmit similar ones: either the Certamen was the source for these later texts or a list was circulating in antiquity that was used as a common source for all. Tzetzes reports the same list of fathers as in the Certamen, sometimes with different spellings and sporadically incorporating additional information (see Introduction on Tzetzes, pp. 47-51, for other similarities between the Certamen and Tzetzes' works). The Suda, after reporting a shorter but very similar list, goes on to give the same genealogy as is found at 45-53.

19-20. Ἑλλάνικος ... Μαίονα: 4 F 5c = fr. 5c Fowler. Hellanicus (mythographer and ethnographer, fifth-fourth century BC) is mentioned to confirm the Smyrnean tradition, which heads the list as in the case of Homer's birthplaces (8-12). Maion is indeed often connected to Smyrna (e.g. Procl. Vit. Hom. 3; on Maion see also 20n.). We know that Hellanicus took an interest in Homer's and Hesiod's genealogy from 4 F 20, on the Homeridae, and 4 F 5a-b-c, according to which Maion was Homer's father, and Homer and Hesiod were both descended from Orpheus. The Certamen too reports this genealogy (45-53) but with the important difference that Homer is here the son of Meles. From Charax (103 F 62), we can infer that according to Hellanicus Maion was paired with Metis (West 1967: 445, Fowler ad loc.).

19. Κλεάνθης: fr. 592 von Arnim; see also 84 F 40. This claim may come from Cleanthes' Περὶ τοῦ ποιητοῦ (so Wachsmuth apud Pearson 1891: 51; Pearson 1891 fr. 67; the title is known from D. L. 7.174-5), to which most of Cleanthes' fragments on Homer are attributed (frr. 55, 65, 66, 67 Wachsmuth apud Pearson 1891; 54, 55, 63, 65, 66, 67 Pearson; fr. 526, 535, 549, 592 von Armin). Von Arnim 1905: 133 (on fr. 592) suggested that Κλεάνθης in L is a misspelling for Νεάνθης, with whom he was sometimes confused (see e.g. fr. 593 von Arnim). The suggestion is attractive, for Cleanthes' fragments on Homer mainly deal with allegoric interpretation of the Homeric poems. By contrast, Neanthes certainly had biographical interests: he wrote a work titled Περὶ ἐνδόξων ἀνδρῶν (84 F 13) and dealt with lives of philosophers and poets (84 F 18 on Sophocles' death; 84 F 20 on Plato's death; 84 F 25 on Epicurus' death; 84 F 27 the young Empedocles' poetic activity). However, the emendation here seems unsafe because we cannot be certain that Cleanthes did not also include some biographical information about the poet in his work.

20. Μαίονα: Maion is the most prominent figure as Homer's father in the poet's biographies together with Meles, which explains the fact that these two names start off the list. Maion is also mentioned in the genealogy at 52-53, but as Homer's grandfather (her daughter generated Homer with the river Meles). See also 19-20n. Maion's presence as Homer's father may be connected to the Homeric works, where Maion is the name of a minor character from Thebes (Il. 4.391-400) who led an attack on Tydeus. Furthermore, in some biographical texts Maion is connected with Lydia (Aristoteles in Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 1.3; Lucianus Dem. Enc. 9), and we know that Μαίονες was an alternative name for the Lydians, which allegedly derived from the name of the eponymous hero or that of a local river (Ael. Her. De Pros. Cath. 3.1.296). Homer himself used the ethnic Μήονες, whence the later form Μαίονες (see Eust. 1575.26). In the Lives Maion is paired with Metis, Cretheis and Hyrnetho (Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 2.2; Anon. Vita Hom. 2.1; Stesimbr. in Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.3).

20-1. Εὐγαίων δὲ Μέλητα: 535 F 2 = 2 Fowler. The source is a historian from Samos who lived in the fifth century BC. His name is spelled differently in the sources (see Bertelli BNJ s.v. Euagon of Samos on 535 T1 and T2): L gives the form Εὐγαίων, but an inscription from Priene (535 F 3), the oldest attestation of Euagon's name (180 BC), suggests that he was in fact called Εὐάγων. He may have been singled out here because he seems to be one of the most ancient sources for Meles as the father of Homer. The scarcity of fragments from his work (only four, and two testimonia) leaves us without a context for this biographical claim. However, we know that Euagon had a strong interest in biographies: in 535 F 4 he deals with the life of Aesop and claims that he was a Thracian slave. Euagon's choice of Meles as the father of Homer may reflect his interest in mirabilia; cf. 535 F 1 (on the Neia, mythological wild beasts living in Samos; see also Bertelli on 535 T 1). Like later sources, Euagon may already have paired the river Meles with Cretheis (thus Fowler).

21. Καλλικλῆς δὲ †Μασαγόραν: 758 F 13c. Callicles is a historian or grammarian from the Hellenistic era. Here he is most likely mentioned to introduce a Cypriot tradition about Homer: we know from Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.2 that Callicles thought that Homer was from Salamis in Cyprus (758 F 13a: κατὰ Καλλικλέα δὲ τῆς ἐν Κύπρῳ Σαλαμῖνος). At 29-30 (= 758 F 13c) the Certamen claims that Homer's father was offered as a hostage by the Cypriots to the Persians: Callicles may be the source for that claim too. As we learn from Paus. 10.24.3 (= 758 F 13d) the Cypriots reckoned Themisto to be Homer's mother. The name Θεμίτη at 25 may refer to the same character, so that we would have another parental couple implicitly paired up in the text. In the Homeric biographies, a Cypriot origin for Homer is referred to also at Anon. Vit. Hom. 2.1; Suda s.v. Ὅμηρος 2; Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. B 2. Connections between Homer and Cyprus were also established by interpreting the Homeric poems: for the Iliad see Schol. T Il. 21.12 = 758 F 13b: ὥς δ' ὅθ' ὑπὸ ῥιπῆς πυρὸς ἀκρίδες ἡερέθονται / φευγέμεναι ποταμόνδε· ἐντεῦθεν τινες Κύπριόν φασι τὸν ποιητὴν· κατὰ τινὰς γὰρ χρόνους ὀχλεῖται ἡ Κύπρος ὑπὸ ἀκρίδων, ὥς ἡ Κυρῆνη καὶ ἡ Βάρκη; for the Cypria see Pi. fr. 265 S.-M. in Ael. VH 9.15; Tz. H. 13.637 (the poem was given by Homer to Stasinus of Cyprus as the dowry of his daughter) and esp. Proclus in Phot. Bibl. 319a 24 (Proclus reports that according to some people the poem was named Cypria after Homer's birthplace).

†Μασαγόραν: the name is not clearly readable in L. Μασαγόραν has been suggested on the basis of traces in the manuscript and on the form Μασσαγόραν transmitted by Tzetzes (Alleg. 62), who is the only other source for this name. Tzetzes also informs us that Mas(s)agoras was a merchant, either because he confused him with the next name in the list (Daemon, a merchant: see 22) or because he had access to now lost information. The form Δμασαγόραν, restored by Barnes on the basis of the name of Homer's father as transmitted by Eustathius (Od. 1713.22) and accepted by most editors, goes back to a tradition that Homer was from Egypt, rather than Cyprus, and therefore does not seem to have any connection with the source and the story given here.

21-2. Δημόκριτος δὲ <ό> Τροιζήνιος Δαήμονα ἔμπορον: Suppl. Hell. 378. Democritus of Troezen is a writer who lived in the first century AD (Lloyd-Jones and Powell 1983: 175). His extant fragments deal with poets (e.g. Aristophanes: Suppl. Hell. 377) and philosophers (e.g. Empedocles: Suppl. Hell. 375). It is difficult to contextualize the claim attributed to him in the present passage of the Certamen: the view that Homer's father was a merchant is unique (except for Tzetzes' claim about Massagoras, on which see 21n.), though travel is widely attributed to Homer and his lineage. The name Daemon is attested only here and in Tzetzes. It may be seen as a speaking name designed to explain Homer's special talents; cf. his father Thamyras and his mothers Metis and Calliope, discussed below. Democritus is not mentioned anywhere else in relation to Homer's biography. The spelling of his name varies in the manuscript tradition: while Athenaeus gives Δημήτριος (Suppl. Hell. 376-7), the form Δημόκριτος in L is transmitted also by the manuscripts of Diogenes Laertius (Suppl. Hell. 374). Allen's suggestion to reduce this claim of the Certamen and that in Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.3 (which runs: κατὰ δὲ Δημοκρίνην Ἀλήμονος) to the same tradition is interesting but would need more evidence. First, it would presuppose yet another different form of the name of Democritus of Troezen. Secondly, it would involve identifying two characters, Alemonos and Daemon, which may in fact represent two different traditions about Homer's origins. Even if it is possible that these two names were confused in the manuscript tradition of Democritus' work, or of the two Lives, Democritus may be presenting Homer's father as a 'skilled, experienced' (δαήμων) merchant, while Democlines suggests a poor beggar (ἀλήμων is the Homeric word for beggars: cf. Od. 17.376 and 19.74). Finally, a person called Democlines is mentioned in Schol. A Il. 2.744 in relation to a textual problem (Αἰθίοκισσι: Δημοκρίνης ἀγνοήσας 'Αἰθιόπεσσιν' ἔγραφεν, κακῶς), but we do not have evidence for the philological activity of Democritus: Democritus and Democlines may in fact be two different people.

22. ἔνιοι δὲ Θαμύραν: this character must be identified with Thamyris (see also Tz. Alleg. 64, who writes Θαμύριν), the bard who is said at Il. 2.591-600 to challenge the Muses in song and to be punished by them. Thamyris is nowhere else attested as the father of Homer and the source of the Certamen is not indicated. However, it is a common habit in the ancient biographies to manufacture genealogical links between poets and the character Thamyris in particular seems to present some features that make him suitable for such a role. First, he is a Homeric character. Secondly, some sources say that Thamyris was punished by the Muses by becoming blind (e.g. Hes. fr. 65 M.-W.). On Thamyris see the recent study by Wilson 2009. Nothing else is known about the biographical legend linking Thamyris and Homer. The corresponding character in the list of mothers is another unknown character, an Ithacesian girl sold by the Phoenicians. West 1967: 445 pairs Thamyris with the Muse Calliope (26-7), but he is not on safe ground: according to tradition, Thamyris asked to marry one of the Muses if he won the contest against them (Schol. b Il. 2.595), but he was defeated and punished (see also Paus. 4.33.7; D. Chr. 13.21) and there is no trace of an actual union of Thamyris with any of the Muses.

22-3. Αἰγύπτιοι δὲ Μενέμαχον ἱερογραμματέα: there is no other known source for Menemachus besides Tzetzes (Alleg. 60) who, as usual in this passage, does not mention his own source. The reading ἱερογραμματέα is not completely clear in L but Tzetzes may give some authority to it. In his list of Homer's seven birthplaces Tzetzes lists Egyptian Thebes, which is the only Egyptian city that seems to have had claims on Homer (perhaps because of its mention in Il. 9.381-4; see also Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.1: ἄλλοι δ' Αἰγύπτιον ἀπὸ Θηβῶν), but in the Certamen there is no explicit mention of Menemachus' home town. The Certamen connects Homer's Egyptian origins with an Egyptian source, uniquely so. Suda s.v. Ὅμηρος 2 does not give any source (οἱ δ' Αἰγύπτιον); Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.2 (ἄλλοι δ' Αἰγύπτιον αὐτὸν εἶπον διὰ τὸ {ἡ} παράγειν τοὺς ἥρωας ἐκ στόματος ἀλλήλους φιλοῦντας, ὅπερ ἐστὶν ἔθος τοῖς Αἰγυπτίοις ποιεῖν) may point to the ancient habit of inferring Homer's birthplace from his poetry, not always with a view to making him a fellow citizen (Zenodotus of Mallos made him a Chaldaean: see Schol. AT Il. 23.79b; Aristarchus an Athenian: Schol. A Il. 13.197). Homer was considered an Egyptian by a Cypriot, Alexander of Paphos (in Eust. Od. 1713.17). There is no evidence of a connection between Menemachus and any of the women in the list of mothers, so that pairing him with Calliope (the corresponding name in the list of mothers) or the woman from Ithaca (West 1967: 445) is mere speculation.

23-4. εἰσὶ δὲ οἱ Τηλέμαχον τὸν Ὀδυσσέως: another case of a genealogical connection between the poet and his characters: on Thamyras see 22n. The reference to Telemachus is evidently designed to connect the poet with Odysseus; this is clear also from Il. 37-43. In Suda s.v. Ὅμηρος 1 Telemachus and Polycaste are mentioned as parents of Homer, and in the Certamen too Polycaste is mentioned in the list of mothers (27): this is another couple that seems to be implicitly matched up in our text. The legend derives from the meeting between Polycaste and Telemachus described in Od. 3.464, where Polycaste bathed Telemachus upon his arrival at Pylos. Despite the concerns of the ancient scholiasts (Schol. Od. 3.464: τόφρα δὲ Τηλέμαχον λούσεν καλὴ Πολυκάστη· λουθῆναι αὐτὸν ἐποίησεν· οὐ γὰρ αὐτὴ ἔλουσεν· ἢ ὅτι ὑπὸ παρθένων ἔθος ἦν τοὺς ἥρωας λούεσθαι), legends about the offspring of the couple were current already in archaic times (cf. Hes. fr. 221 M.-W., where they have a child called Persepolis). In the oracle uttered by the Pythia to Hadrian, however, Telemachus is matched with Epicaste: see 32-43n.

24. οἱ μὲν Μῆτιν: this character is mentioned as the mother of Homer only here; Suda Ὅμηρος 1 gives the name in the form Εὐμητις. Her name, 'Cleverness', is appropriate for the mother of Homer; see above for connections with Odysseus. The Suda confirms that Maion is connected to Metis in one strand of the tradition (on Maion see 20n.): the Certamen too seems to pair them up as both names are in the first position in their respective lists. The Suda also adds that Eumetis was the daughter of Euepes son of Mnesigenes and married Maion who went to Smyrna at the same time as the Amazons (Μαίων, ὃς ἦλθεν ἅμα ταῖς Ἀμαζόσιν ἐν Σμύρνῃ καὶ γήμας Εὐμητιν τὴν Εὐέπους τοῦ Μνησιγένους ἐποίησεν Ὅμηρον). The names Euepes and Mnesigenes are otherwise unknown but are both speaking names (built on the words ἔπος and μνήμη). The fact that Maion went to Smyrna ‘together with the Amazons’, who are connected to foundation myths of Smyrna (see e.g. Str. 12.3.21; Schol. bT Il. 6.186), may also connect Homer with these myths, and certainly makes him one of the first citizens of Smyrna.

οἱ δὲ Κρηθίδα: on Cretheis, and the couple Cretheis-Meles, see 9-10n.

25. οἱ δὲ Θεμίτην: she is probably to be identified with Themisto, Homer’s mother in the Cypriot tradition according to Pausanias (10.24.3): see 21n.

οἱ δὲ Εὐγνηθώ: this name is not otherwise attested. The merchant Daemon is the man in the corresponding position in the list of fathers, but there is no evidence to connect them. However, there is no need to emend Εὐγνηθώ to Ὑρνηθώ (see apparatus), as the Certamen suggests no connection with Maion, Hyrnetho’s partner in the Homeric Lives (Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.3; Anon. Vit. Hom. 2.1). The appearance of Eugnetho here may perhaps have been inspired by Hyrnetho, but it is no mere slip: somebody created an obviously speaking name, and it should stand.

25-6. ἔνιοι δὲ Ἰθακησίαν τινὰ ὑπὸ Φοινίκων ἀπεμποληθεῖσαν: this character is nowhere attested in the Homeric biographies but it displays some features that are common in this type of literature: the fact that she is said to be from Ithaca is clearly an attempt to connect Homer with the Odyssey (see also the case of Telemachus, 23-4n.); stories about forced movements of the mother of Homer, and more generally the modest origins of the poet, were common: see e.g. Cretheis who had to escape from her home town after becoming pregnant (Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 1.2-3). The role of the Phoenicians as traders and their connection with abduction stories in the Odyssey (esp. Od. 15.415-84) seem also relevant here. It is unclear why Rzach proposed the emendation Ἰδακησίαν.

26-7. οἱ δὲ Καλλιόπην τὴν Μοῦσαν: a transparent attempt to make Homer the inspired poet par excellence. Ancient readers were attuned to the symbolic force of this claim: compare an epigram by Antipater (AP 16.296: εἰ δέ με Φοίβου/ χορὴ λέξαι πινυτὰν ἀμφαδὰ μαντοσύναν,/ πάτρα τοι τελέθει μέγας οὐρανός, ἐκ δὲ γυναικὸς/ οὐ θνατᾶς ματρὸς δ' ἔπλεο Καλλιόπας; see also AP 16.295) and the way this same epigram is introduced in Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 1.4 (ἄξιον δὲ μηδὲ τὸ ὑπὸ Ἀντιπάτρου τοῦ ἐπιγραμματοποιοῦ γραφὲν ἐπίγραμμα παραλιπεῖν, ἔχον οὐκ ἀσέμνως); see also Isaac Porphyrogenitus Praefatio in Homerum 8 Kindstrand (οἱ δὲ τὴν Καλλιόπην φασὶ γεννῆσαι τοῦτον, εἰκότως διὰ τὴν τῶν ῥημάτων αὐτοῦ καλλιέπειαν). Calliope is Homer's mother also in Anon. Vit. Hom. 2.1. In the Suda (Ὅμηρος 1) her partner is Apollo, who does not appear in the Certamen's list of fathers. Apollo and Calliope are mentioned in the genealogy at 46 and 48 respectively, but with different roles.)

27. τινὲς δὲ Πολυκάστην τὴν Νέστορος: see 23-4n.

27-32. ἐκαλεῖτο δὲ ... πηροὶ καλοῦνται: the issue of the poet's original name, already mentioned earlier in the text (see 10-12n. for a discussion on the connection between Smyrne and the name Melesigenes), now becomes the focus of attention. The Certamen offers three alleged original names (thus echoing the list of birthplaces at 8-17) and suggests two explanations as to why they were dropped. As in other lists, the text combines well known traditions with less widely attested ones: Meles and Auletes are otherwise unknown while Melesigenes is very common. The change of name is motivated with reference to the most widely circulating etymologies for the name Homer ('blind' and 'hostage') but unlike what we are told in all the extant Lives, here it is Homer's father, rather than Homer himself, who has been taken hostage. Conversely

Meles, elsewhere the name of Homer's father, is here attributed to the poet himself.

27-8. ἐκαλεῖτο δὲ Μέλῃς: otherwise the name of Homer's father, in the context of the Smyranean tradition (9-10n.). The absence of punctuation in this part of the manuscript seems to show that Melesigenes was perceived, at the very least by the scribe of L, as another form of the name Meles, rather than a different one (the manuscript text runs: ἐκαλεῖτο δὲ Μέλῃς ὥς δέ τινές φασι Μελησιγενῆς· ὥς δὲ ἔνιοι ἀὐλητήν). As a proper name, Meles is attested for a singer mentioned by Plato (Grg. 502a4).

28. ὥς δέ τινές φασι Μελησιγενῆς: see 10n.

28-9. ὥς <δ'> ἔνιοι Αὐλητής: an otherwise unknown name for Homer, clearly referring to Homer's poetic activity; for other speaking names in Homer's family see the genealogy at 45-53. Welcker 1835: 149 proposed the emendation Ἄλτης, unanimously accepted by later editors, on the basis of Schol. T Il. 22.51: ὀνομάκλυτος Ἄλτης· Ἀθηνοκλῆς φησι τὸν Ὅμηρον πρόωγν Ἄλτην καλεῖσθαι διὰ τὸ ἐπαινεῖν αὐτὸν ὀνομάκλυτος. Altes is a minor Homeric character, the father of Priamus' first wife Laotoe, and is mentioned in the Iliad only twice (Il. 21.85-6 and Il. 22.51). The fact that Homer called him ὀνομάκλυτος (despite his minor role) led Athenocles to think that Altes was Homer's original name. But although Αὐλητής may result from a corruption of Ἄλτης, it also testifies to the continued creative energy of the biographical tradition and may respond to a shift in paedagogical emphasis: Ἄλτης responds to the habit of drawing biographical information on Homer from his works; Αὐλητής would be a speaking name, like many others transmitted in the poets' genealogies and in the Certamen too. There is no need therefore to emend the name given by the manuscript, except for its ending: the accusative in the manuscript (see apparatus) is due to a misunderstanding of the copyist, who probably thought that this name was connected to the following infinitive ὀνομασθῆναι (as the absence of the necessary punctuation seems to point out), which is instead to be taken with the accusative Ὅμηρον.

29-32. ὀνομασθῆναι ... καλοῦνται: the text lists the two most common etymologies for the name Homer, 'blind' and 'hostage': for discussion of this alternative etymology see 11-12n. The Certamen does not express a preference for either of the etymologies listed. About the possibility that Homer's Cypriot father Masagoras was given hostage to the Persians, and more generally for the Cypriot tradition on Homer, see 21n. That it is Homer's father who was given hostage and that he was given to the Persians are details unique to the Certamen: in the rest of the biographical tradition Homer himself is said to be given hostage by the Smyrneans either to the Chians (Procl. Vit. Hom. 3) or the Colophonians (Suda s.v. Ὅμηρος 3). For modern discussion of Homer's name see Bonfante 1968, Deroy 1972, Durante 1957, West 1999, Nagy 1979: 296-300 and 2006, Debiasi 2001 and 2012: 463-70.

32-43. ὅπερ δὲ ἀκηκόαμεν ... δεδοξακότος: the mention of the emperor Hadrian (117-38 AD) is our only clue for dating the Certamen, but it is not easy to interpret. The Greek may mean that Hadrian was still alive (e.g. Nietzsche 1870: 536 and most recently Uden 2010), but does not exclude that the compilation was made a little after the emperor's death: see Wilamowitz 1916: 397 ('der Verfasser wird nicht viele Dezennien nach Hadrian gelebt haben'), Vogt 1959: 196 n. 6 ('Freilich darf man nicht an eine Entstehung noch in hadrianischer Zeit denken, sondern lediglich an die Regierungszeit Hadrians als terminus post quem'), West 1967: 433 ('Hadrian is dead but of fresh memory'). Furthermore, the epithet θεϊότατος was used of Hadrian both during his life and after his death (cf. Mason: 1974: 53 and 125). However, the claim that we must trust the oracle 'given the identity of the enquirer and the responder' (41-2) and the very presence of the episode in this work seem to indicate that it was inserted in the narrative while the emperor was still alive, perhaps not much after his visit to Delphi (125 AD). In a recent study Uden 2010 (esp. 123-9) convincingly argues that this claim is to be seen in the context of Hadrian's role in contemporary debates about Greek literature and culture, which did not always meet with approval. The presence of a different response by the Pythia to the same question (56-60) suggests that who authored the Certamen did not really believe that the answer given to Hadrian was the most trustworthy, and probably inserted that claim only as a formal sign of respect for the emperor. But the content of Pythia's response does not need to be read as ironic: Uden 2010: 127 claims that the notion of an Ithacan Homer would have appeared absurd to anyone in antiquity, but there is nothing to prove this claim. Certainly, within the Certamen that tradition is presented as equal to any other (see 23-4.: Telemachus; 25-6: the Ithacan girl).

37-40. ἄγνωστόν ... ἄνδρα: this epigram is found only here and in AP 14.102, with some textual variants, among which the name Epicaste, instead of Polycaste (see also Od. 3.464 et Cert. 27). In AP 14 it is transmitted among riddles, mathematical problems and other oracular texts (book 14 is titled Ἀριθμητικὰ καὶ γοῖφοι). For other stories of people interrogating the oracle on Homer, and other oracular responses, see AP 16.292-299, and Lucian Alex. 53.

44-55. ἔνιοι μὲν οὖν αὐτὸν προγενέστερον ... ἐν Αὐλίδι τῆς Βοιωτίας: the Certamen now discusses another much debated issue of Homer's biography, his date. The discussion is based on a comparison between Homer and Hesiod, which was one of the most common ways of approaching the matter in antiquity. Graziosi 2002: 90-124 identifies three distinct ways of dating Homer by connecting him to a particular place or event, to a specific individual (usually another poet), and to his subject matter, the Trojan War. Focussing on Homer's connection with Hesiod is a meaningful choice in the present context, in that it allows the text to introduce their contest, and hints at its outcome. In antiquity, moreover, such discussion of Homer's and Hesiod's relative chronology was also seen as a means to assess the relationship between heroic and didactic poetry; see most recently Beecroft 2010: 79: genealogical claims function as claims about genre theory, therefore the variations in the relationships between two poets are a means of assigning priorities to the different genres and configuring their relationships in different ways. The Certamen introduces three options, apparently without taking sides (ἔνιοι μὲν ... τινὲς δέ ... τινὲς δέ). But only the second option, which portrays Homer as a younger contemporary of Hesiod, is supported by a genealogy. The first one (Homer is older than Hesiod), as also the third (Homer and Hesiod are exact contemporaries and competed with one another) are presented without any further support. This confirms the impression, given early on in the text, that at the time of the contest Homer was only at the beginning of his artistic career (see 15-17n.), perhaps as a way of mitigating Homer's defeat against an older and more expert Hesiod. In fact, a close reading of the genealogy and a comparison with other sources, may even suggest that the Certamen presents the contest as potentially implausible: according to the final part of the genealogy as found in L (and quite differently from other sources of the genealogy, see esp. 51-3n.) the two poets' lifetime would hardly have overlapped.

44-5. ἔνιοι μὲν οὖν αὐτὸν προγενέστερον Ἡσιόδου φασὶν εἶναι: the text does not offer any support to the view that Homer is older than Hesiod. Homer's chronological priority was often used to assert his greater authority (T5-T9 Most, esp. T7 = Vell. Pat. 1.7.1: ut tempore tanto viro (scil. Homero), ita operis auctoritate proximus; T8 = Plut. Letter of Condolence to Apollonius 105d: ὁ δὲ (Ἡσίοδος) μετὰ τοῦτον καὶ τῇ δόξῃ καὶ τῷ χρόνῳ), a view which is clearly incompatible with Homer's defeat in the contest.

45-53. τινὲς δὲ νεώτερον ... Ὅμηρον: the presence of an extended genealogy makes this option look like the most trustworthy among the three proposed. The genealogy must have been circulating as early as in the fifth century BC: see Proclus (Vit. Hom. 4), who quotes the historians Hellanicus (4 F 5b = fr. 5 Fowler), Damastes (5 F 11b = fr. 11 Fowler) and Pherecydes (3 F 167 = fr. 167 Fowler); another version is transmitted in Suda s.v. Ὀμηρος 1, with reference to the historian Charax (103 F 62). For an overview see Kivilo 2010: 12-17. This traditional material, however, is consciously adapted in the Certamen to suit its view of Homer and Hesiod. Thus, the Certamen provides the two poets with divine origins, in accordance with the opening claim that Homer and Hesiod are the most divine poets (see 1-2.). Examples include Apollo, Poseidon, Methone, Calliope, Meles and the nymph Thoosa, whose counterpart in Charax was a Thracian woman, Aithousa. For the same purpose the genealogy includes some divine mothers: we find them together with those male figures who are neither gods nor poets, thus ensuring that each level of the genealogy features either a divinely inspired figure, or a deity (Methone is mentioned with Pierus, Calliope with Oeagrus). Divine mothers are also mentioned at the beginning and end of the genealogy: Thoosa, daughter of Poseidon, appears at the beginning, Hesiod's mother Pycimede, daughter of Apollo, at the end. (Homer's own mother does not need to be a goddess as his divine origins are secured by his father, the river god Meles.) As well as several poets (Linus, Orpheus and Melanopus) the genealogy also features names that would suit poets (Harmonides, Philoterpes, Euphemus, Epiphraides). Other names are attested elsewhere, but with different roles (Melanopus, Dius, Apelles, Maion) and the precise relations among some of the characters also vary; for example, while Homer and Hesiod are first cousins in Proclus and the Suda, the genealogy in the Certamen supports the claim that Homer was younger than Hesiod. Accordingly, the positions of some characters are changed and additional characters inserted (Perses, Maion's daughter and Meles) in order to increase the chronological gap between the two poets.

46. Ἀπόλλωνός φασι καὶ Θεώσης τῆς Ποσειδῶνος: Thoosa is a character known also from other sources, but with different roles than the one attributed to her in this context: she is Poseidon's wife rather than his daughter and is never said to be Apollo's partner (Od. 1.71-3: she is a nymph, daughter of Phorcys, mother of Polyphemus by Poseidon; Schol. Il. 1.71; Schol. Theoc. 11.67-68; Apollod. 7.4.6; Eust. Od. 1.22.3; Emp. fr. 122.9; Nonn. D. 39.293). In Charax' version Aithousa, described as a woman from Thrace, takes Thoosa's place: unlike the Certamen, Charax does not emphasise the divine origins of the poets. In other sources, Aithousa is the name of a nymph, who is also said to be Poseidon's daughter and to have had a son by Apollo (Apollod. 3.100; Paus. 9, 20, 1; Schol. Hes. Th. 54b1; Ael. Herod. De Pros. Cath. 296, 7; the son is named Eleutheros, not Linus). Some early editors followed Charax and emended Θοώσης to Αἰθούσης, but there is no reason to believe that that was the name used in a hypothetical original version of this genealogy.

47. Λίνον: on this character see West 1983: 56-67 and Ford 2002: 151. Linus and the Linus song, funeral dirge to which he is connected, are known to both Homer and Hesiod (Il. 18.569-70; Hes. fr. 305-306 M.-W.); his presence is thus suitable for the genealogy of these two poets. Several myths circulated about Linus in antiquity; cf. Paus. 9.29.9, who reports the view that at least two poets of this name existed. The genealogy of the Certamen is unique: most commonly, Linus is said to be the son of Apollo and Calliope (Apollod. 1.3.2; Paus. 1.43.7 and 2.19.7), though D. L. 1.4.1 claims that his parents are Hermes and the Muse Ourania (for Ourania only cf. also Hes. fr. 305 M.-W.), and sometimes he is said to be the son of Oeagrus and Calliope (also mentioned in the Certamen, but as parents of Orpheus two generations later). Linus is said to have competed with the god Apollo, and after losing the contest was killed by the god (Paus. 9.29.6).

Λίνου δὲ Πίερον: Pierus is known as the father of nine maidens called Pierides. As was the case with Linus (see above), his family too is connected to a contest story: the Pierides are said to have challenged the Muses in a poetic contest and, after their defeat, to have been turned into birds (Paus. 9.29.3-4; Ant. Lib. 9). In the Certamen he is the son of Linus and father of Oeagrus. In the genealogy of Charax he occupies the same position. Other sources suggest a different lineage: according to Melisseus (402 F 1) Pierus is Linus' father and Methone his sister.

47-8. Πιέρου δὲ καὶ νύμφης Μεθώνης Οἶαγρον: among the extant versions of this genealogy Methone is mentioned only here: Proclus starts with the following generation (Orpheus) and Charax gives only the names of the male characters. She is a nymph, one of the Alkyonids, who threw themselves into the sea after Herakles killed their father, and subsequently turned into halcyons: see Suda s.v. Ἀλκυονίδες ἡμέραι.

48. Οἶαγρον: it seems that there is no other trace of Oeagrus' being the son of Pierus and Methone. In D. S. 3.65.6 he is the son of the Thracian king Charops and king of Thrace himself. The claim that he fathered Orpheus is found in all versions of this genealogy and seems to be the only fixed feature of this character. See below.

Οἶαγρου δὲ καὶ Καλλιόπης Ὅρφέα: several witnesses agree that Orpheus' parents were Calliope and Oeagros (A. R. 1.23; Tz. Ad Lyc. 831); though others give no name for the mother (Pl. Smp. 179d, D. S. 4.25.2 and Clem. Al. Protr. 7.63). Oeagros has a different son in Proclus (Dorion) and in Charax (Dres). According to Apollod. 1.14.1, Calliope and Oeagros also had Linus, who in this genealogy is in another position. On Calliope see 26-7., where she is mentioned in the list of Homer's mothers. Here she guarantees the presence of a divinity in earlier levels of Homer's genealogy.

Ὅρφέα: the Certamen is the only extant text in which Homer and Hesiod are descendants of Orpheus. Orpheus is arguably the most important poet in this genealogy, and indeed Proclus reports the genealogy only from Orpheus onwards, claiming that 'Hellanicus, Damastes, and Pherekydes trace his lineage back to Orpheus'. According to Kivilo 2010: 16-17 and 54-6 his presence in the genealogy may point to a role of the Orphic poets in creating it, and more generally in shaping biographical traditions (see esp. pp. 54-6, where she also spots Orphic influences in the traditions about Hesiod). The connection between Homer, Hesiod and Orpheus was not only genealogical: frequent references to Orpheus, Musaeus, Hesiod and Homer (usually in this order, cf. Hes. T17, T18, T116a, T119bi, bii Most) suggest that together they were seen as the most ancient and authoritative poets. For the possibility that this series of names is to be interpreted chronologically, see Graziosi 2002: 107 n. 51, Ford 2002: 45, Koning 2010: 52-5.

49. Ὀρφέως δὲ Ὅρτην: this seems to be the only attestation of a character named Ortes. His counterpart in the genealogy of Charax is called Δοῖς: Goettling, Nietzsche and Rzach emend the text of L on that basis, but Dres too is otherwise unknown. Proclus gives yet another name, Dorion. Both Proclus and Charax add Eukles, a name that is integrated into this genealogy by many editors (see apparatus) but on no safe ground.

Ἀρμονίδην: the name is suitable for a poet, but as many others in this context it is nowhere else attested in relation to the genealogy of Homer and Hesiod. In Il. 5.60 Harmonides is the father of Phereclus, and, like his son, is described as a Trojan ship-builder. The scholium to the passage makes it clear that the name Harmonides was connected with the verb ἀρμόζειν and that it was felt to be significant in this context (Ἀρμονίδεω: ὅτι ὀνοματοθετικὸς ὁ ποιητής, καὶ ἐν Ὀδυσσεΐα παραπλησίως ποιεῖ οἰκεῖον γὰρ τέκτονος τὸ ἀρμόζειν, καὶ κεῖ (sc. X 330): 'Τερπιάδης δέ τ' αἰοιδός'). It would seem that Lucian aimed for a similar effect when introducing Harmonides the flute-player as the protagonist in his homonymous dialogue. Tzetzes (H. 168), commenting on the Iliadic passage, exemplifies the many uses of the verb ἀρμόζειν by comparing ship-builders and rhetoricians on the ground that they both 'ἀρμόττουσι' (πλοῖα, ships, or λόγους, words). Proclus and Charax transmit the name Ἰδμονίδην, another unknown character. The emendation Ἰαδμονίδην, proposed by Nietzsche and Rzach, is unconvincing: this name is not attested, and it has been created on the basis of Aesop's kinsman Ἰάδμων, or Ἰδμων (see Hdt. 2.134; Suda s.v. Αἴσωπος; Plu. The Delays of Divine Vengeance 557a) that seems to be irrelevant in this context and it misses the importance of speaking names in the text. See also, on Auletes, 28-9n.

Φιλοτέρπην: this name is attested only in this genealogy, in all of its versions. It is clearly another speaking name ('fond of pleasure') which may suit a poet. The compound is also attested as an adjective (e.g. Nonn. D. 40.366).

50. Εὐφημῶν: another speaking name suitable for a poet, or for a poet's ancestor. It is frequently found as the name of Stesichorus' father (Pl. Phdr. 244A; St. Byz. s.v. Μάταυρος; Vita Pindari, De Novem Lyricis 11 Drachmann; Suda s.v. Στησίχορος) and also appears in Musaios' genealogy (Suda s.v. Μουσαῖος). As an ancestor of Homer and Hesiod, Euphemus is attested only here and in the genealogy of Charax. Proclus gives the form Chariphemus. For Chariphemus as the founder of Cyme see Ephorus 70 F 99 = Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.2. For Euphemus as a Homeric character see Il. 2.846 (he is the son of Troezenus and the captain of the Ciconian spearmen).

Ἐπιφράδην: another little-known character with a name that may suit a poet; cf. ἐπιφραδέως (from ἐπιφράζομαι), 'wisely', 'circumspectly'. The name is not attested outside this genealogy.

Μελάνωπον: a mythical poet from Cyme who features also in other biographies of Homer and Hesiod, though in different roles: Pausanias (5.7.8) claims that he lived after Olen; he composed a hymn to Opis and Hecaege, two daughters of Boreas who introduced the worship of Artemis to Delos (as testified also by Call. Del. 292). Melanopus apparently claimed that these two maidens came to Delos before Achaeia, who according to Olen was the first to arrive on the island. In the Certamen Melanopus is the father of Apellaïos and Dios; in Proclus he is the father of Apelles and grandfather of Dios and Maion; cf. Suda s.v. Ἡσίοδος (father of Apelles, grandfather of Dios). The name of Melanopus is also attested elsewhere in connection with Homer: in Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 1 a character with the same name, although not safely identifiable with the poet mentioned by Pausanias, is a man of modest means who went from Magnesia to Aeolian Cyme when this city was founded and there fathered Homer's mother Cretheis; in Lucian Enc. Dem. 9.16 he is again said to be the father of Homer's mother (καὶ μητέρα <τὴν> Μελανώπου).

51-3. τούτου δὲ ... Ὅμηρον: as this genealogy is used here as evidence for Homer's being younger than Hesiod and related to him, the final part differs substantially from Proclus' version, where the poets are said to be contemporaries: Procl. Vit. Hom. 4: Μαίονα γὰρ φασὶ τὸν Ὀμήρου πατέρα καὶ Δῖον τὸν Ἡσιόδου γενέσθαι Ἀπέλλιδος τοῦ Μελανώπου. (Charax reports only Homer's parentage and neglects to insert Dius and Hesiod.) This is achieved mainly by giving different roles to Apelles, Maion and Dius and other subtle variations. In the Certamen Maion is presented as two generations younger than Dius, Hesiod's father, and Homer is not his son but his grandson by his daughter. The ultimate result is to present Homer as three generations younger than Hesiod. The reading Πέρσου makes Maion the son of Hesiod's brother, and the kinship between the two poets is reinforced. There is no need to emend it to Ἀπέλλου or a different form of this same name (see apparatus). This emendation would balance the genealogy, otherwise brutally interrupted by Apelles' side, and would make it more similar to its counterparts in other sources; but complete consistency between the various versions cannot be achieved. Inserting another female character, the daughter of Maion, allows the text to introduce the river god Meles and give Homer a divine parent (thus balancing the fact that Hesiod's mother Pycimede is the daughter of Apollo). Nietzsche's emendation (καὶ θυγατρὸς instead of θυγατρὸς καὶ) is not necessary.

51-2. Δίου δὲ καὶ Πυκιμήδης τῆς Ἀπόλλωνος θυγατρὸς Ἡσίοδον καὶ Πέρσην: while the name of Hesiod's brother comes from Works and Days, and perhaps that of his father too (cf. Op. 299: Πέρση, δῖον γένος), Hesiod makes no mention of his mother in his work. The tradition, however, unanimously transmits the name Pycimede since at least the fourth century BC (Ephorus 70 F

1= Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. A 2). Nothing is known about the origins of her name, which is appropriate for the mother of a didactic poet: it means ‘cautious minded’, ‘wise’ (see also Kivilo 2010: 9). Ephorus (loc. cit.) claims that Dius married Pycimede in Ascra, after leaving Cyme because of debts. In Tz. Life of Hesiod 1 Colonna Dius and Pycimede leave Cyme together; in this context she is also explicitly said to be the mother of Perses. In P.Oxy. 3537 r. she is mentioned as ὀλβίστη μήτειρα; cf. also Suda s.v. Ἡσίοδος. The fact that Pycimede is said to be Apollo’s daughter (a suggestion not found anywhere else) reinforces the claim of kinship between the god of poetry, mentioned at the very beginning of the genealogy, and the two poets who at the beginning of the work were introduced as θεϊότατοι (1).

54-5. τινὲς δὲ συνακμάσαι ... ἐν Αὐλίδι τῆς Βοιωτίας: in a work that devotes much space to the contest of Homer and Hesiod, this episode is introduced in a surprising way. The phrasing implies that Homer and Hesiod had to be contemporaries in order to be able to compete, but this option is introduced in the same way as the others (τινὲς δὲ ... φασίν) and is supported by no evidence. Some authors in antiquity refused to believe that the contest happened on the basis that the two poets did not live at the same time (Proclus and Tzetzes, see Introduction, pp. 44-51). The connection between the story of the contest and the view that the two poets lived at the same time is found elsewhere too (cf. Philostratus in Introduction, pp. 31-5; Aul. Gell. NA 3.11.3) and the two traditions may well have developed to support each other (see also Kivilo 2010: 22; but note Hdt. 2.53.2; Clem. Al. Strom. 1.21.117.4; Sync. Chron. 202.21-2 and 206.9 (T 10, 12, 14 Most), where no such connection seems to be implied.

55. ὁμόσε <γενομένους> ἐν Αὐλίδι τῆς Βοιωτίας: by saying that Homer and Hesiod met up in Aulis before the contest, the compiler draws a further detail of the story from Hesiod’s Works and Days 650-9: the two poets are said to make the same trip from Aulis to Chalcis that Hesiod mentions in that passage, and by which he sets his poetry against that of Homer – see Introduction on Hesiod, esp. p. 12. It is unlikely that Aulis is mentioned here as the location of the contest, pace Nagy 2010: 43 among others. First, there is a linguistic problem in the transmitted text of the manuscript: the expression ἀγωνίσασθαι ὁμόσε ('compete with each other?') is never attested in Greek literature, and it is unlikely that ὁμόσε should be taken together with ἀγωνίσασθαι. Moreover, at 67-8 the contest is said to have taken place at Chalcis. Because the location of the contest was fixed at Chalcis by Hesiod himself, and was accepted unanimously in all other versions of the story, Chalcis must be the correct location of the contest in the Certamen too. Nietzsche's emendation ἐν Χαλκίδι τῆς Εὐβοίας may thus seem tempting (see Nietzsche's apparatus ad loc.: 'Εὐβοία et Βοιωτία nomina saepius confunduntur, veluti in schol. ad Hesiod. Theog. v. 54'), but it too founders on the difficulty of construing ἀγωνίσασθαι with ὁμόσε. Busse's supplement <γενομένους> elegantly restores the gist of the text before corruption occurred: the two poets met at Aulis before the contest, and together sailed to Chalcis to compete. Importantly, this sequence of events is also implied in the following lines: 66-8: καὶ οὗτοι οὖν ἐκ τύχης, ὥς φασι, συμβαλόντες ἀλλήλοις ἦλθον εἰς τὴν Χαλκίδα. The particles γάρ at 55 (ποιήσαντα γὰρ τὸν Μαργίτην) and οὖν at 66 (καὶ οὗτοι οὖν), that brings the narrative back to the contest, indicate the presence of a digression that explains how the poets ended up competing in Chalcis after their initial meeting in Aulis.

ποιήσαντα γὰρ τὸν Μαργίτην: the Margites is the only work that Homer is said to have composed before the contest; all other works are attributed to the period after it (Thebaid and Epigoni at 256 and 258, Iliad and Odyssey at 275-6, Hymn to Apollo at 317; some epigrams). Moreover, Homer is explicitly said to be getting on in years only after the composition of the Hymn to Apollo, his last work to be mentioned before his fatal sojourn on Ios (323). The Certamen thus seems to suggest that the contest happened while Homer was still young, perhaps to play down the significance of his defeat. The idea, current in Imperial times, that the Margites is a juvenile work, and more specifically that it was Homer's first, was already introduced in par. 2 (see 15-17n.).

56. περιέρχεσθαι κατὰ πόλιν ῥαψωδοῦντα: from the beginning of his artistic career Homer is presented as a travelling poet and performer. The verb ῥαψωδέω appears twice in the Certamen. In both instances it refers to Homer, and means 'to perform'. By contrast, compounds of ποιέω are used in the text to indicate acts of poetic creation: 55-6: ποιήσαντα γὰρ τὸν Μαργίτην περιέρχεσθαι κατὰ πόλιν ῥαψωδοῦντα; 286-7: ἐκεῖθεν δὲ παραγενόμενος εἰς Κόρινθον ἐρραψώδει τὰ ποιήματα. Homer is thus depicted here both as a poet and as a proto-rhapsode, that is, the first performer of his own poetry. The latter idea may have been promoted by Homeric rhapsodes keen to give their profession a respectable ancestry. Indeed, the very fact that composition and performance are separated so clearly in the text may point to rhapsodic practice, as reflected also in the famous story of Cynaethus stealing from Homer told in Schol. Pi. N. 2.1. On the rhapsodes see Graziosi 2002: 21-40; on 'wandering poets' more generally see Hunter-Rutherford 2009. Some Greek texts present Hesiod too as a rhapsode, and indeed as a proto-rhapsode, sometimes along with Homer: [Hes.] fr. 357 M.-W. (on which see the Introduction, pp. 14-18) and 4 F 464 (ῥαψωιδῆσαι δὲ φησι πρῶτον τὸν Ἡσίοδον Νικοκλῆς), both transmitted in Schol. Pi. N. 2.1; Pl. R. 10.600d: Ὅμηρον δ' ἄρα οἱ ἐπ' ἐκείνου, εἵπερ οἷός τ' ἦν πρὸς ἀρετὴν ὀνῆσαι ἀνθρώπους, ἢ Ἡσίοδον ῥαψωιδεῖν ἂν περιόντας εἶων. Rhapsodes must have performed Hesiod's works too: cf. Pl. Lg. 2.658d: ῥαψωιδὸν δὲ καλῶς Ἰλιάδα καὶ Ὀδύσσειαν ἢ τι τῶν Ἡσιοδείων διατιθέντα τάχ' ἂν ἡμεῖς οἱ γέροντες ἥδιστα ἀκούσαντες νικᾶν ἂν φαῖμεν πάμπολυ. For the hypothesis that Hesiod depicts himself as a rhapsode in Th. 30, see Patzer 1993. In the Certamen, however, the verb ῥαψωδέω is only used of Homer, one of several points of contrast between the two poets. While Homer travels a lot and his travels are always connected to his poetic performances, Hesiod travels far less: he goes to Chalcis to participate in the contest; after that, he goes to Delphi to dedicate his victory and consult the oracle, and then to Oinoe in an unsuccessful attempt to escape his fate. The text thus reinforces the image of Hesiod as a poet who was always, and from the beginning, connected to a particular place. Homer, by contrast, emerges as a poet who travelled around the cities of Greece during his lifetime and could therefore be claimed by every Greek city after his death.

56-62. ἐλθόντα δὲ καὶ εἰς Δελφοὺς ... περὶ τὴν ἐκεῖ χώραν: Homer himself goes to interrogate the Pythia about his own birthplace: this fits well in a text that opens by emphasising the debate existing over the poet's origins. The Pythia establishes a genealogical connection between Homer and Ios: an apparent contradiction with 37-40, according to which the Pythia told Hadrian that Homer was from Ithaca. This may agree with the impression that the author of the Certamen does not share his own claim on the truthfulness of this utterance (41-3). On the Pythia's response to Homer see 59-60n. The oracle also contains a prophecy on Homer's death: this allows a parallel with the oracle consulted by Hesiod, later in the text (215-23). The fact that Homer's oracle is mentioned so early in the narration, while Hesiod visits Delphi only after the contest, is meaningful in narrative terms. The oracles (and therefore the fate of the two poets) and the contest seem to have strong causal relations with each other. The meeting between Homer and Hesiod, hence their contest, takes place ultimately because of the oracle Homer received (the poet ended up in Aulis in an attempt to stay away from the established place of his death as revealed by the Pythia); Hesiod in turn consults the oracle precisely because of the contest (he goes to Delphi to dedicate the victory). As Vogt 1959 and West 1967 argue, it is possible that the episode of Homer's oracle was present already in Alcidas' account. Alcidas was the source for the the episode of Hesiod's oracle and death (240), and the source for Homer's death too (P.Mich. inv. 2754): the episode of Homer's oracle would complete an elaborate narrative structure and depict a clear nexus oracle-contest-death, which may well have been present already in one of the Certamen's literary source.

59-60. ἔστιν Ἰος νῆσος ... αἶνιγμα φύλαξαι: (AP 14.65) the epigram is transmitted with several variations in other sources, some of which mix it with verses from another oracle given by the Pythia to Homer: (AP 14.66) Ὀλβιε καὶ δύσδαιμον—ἔφυς γὰρ ἐπ' ἀμφοτέροισι / πατρίδα δίζηαι· μητρὸς δέ τοι, οὐ πατρός ἐστι / μητρόπολις ἐν νήσῳ ἀπὸ Κρήτης εὐρείης, / Μίνωος γαίης, οὔτε σχεδὸν οὔτ' ἀποτηλοῦ· / ἐν τῇ μοῖρ' ἐστὶν σε τελευτῆσαι βίοτιοι, / εὐτ' ἂν ἀπὸ γλώσσης παίδων μὴ γνῶς ἐσακούσας / δυσξύνετον σκολιοῖσι λόγοις εἰρημένον ὕμνον· / δοιᾶς γὰρ ζωῆς μοίρας λάχες· ἦν μὲν ἀμαυρὰν / ἡελίων δισσῶν, τὴν δ' ἀθανάτοισι ἰσόμοιρον, / ζῶντί τε καὶ φθιμένῳ· φθίμενος δ' ἔτι πολλὸν ἀγῆρως. On this epigram see Skiadas 1965: 49-52. Pausanias (10.24.9) and Stephanus of Byzantium (s.v. Ἰος) report a version of the oracle that starts with the first two verses of AP 14.66 and then continues with our AP 14.65. Pseudo-Plutarch reports both the epigrams in succession, as they are in the Greek Anthology.

62-8. κατὰ δὲ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον ... ἦλθον εἰς τὴν Χαλκίδα: these lines are part of the short digression which started at 55n. and explains how the two poets ended up competing in Chalcis. Many of the details concerning the setting of the poetic contest are taken from Op. 650-9 (Hesiod's sea trip from Aulis; the contest is held on the occasion of Amphidamas' funeral games; these games were organized by Amphidamas' sons; and remarkable prizes are announced).

63. Γανύκτωρ: this name occurs in two circumstances in the account of the life of Hesiod. He is the son of Amphidamas, organiser and judge of his father's funeral games, here and in Tz. Life of Hesiod 126 Colonna. But according to other traditions, of which the Certamen too, among others, is aware, Ganyctor is a son of Phegeus, from Locris, one of Hesiod's murderers with his brother Amphiphanes (226-7n.) or a man from Naupactus father of Hesiod's murderers (241n.).

63-4. Ἀμφιδάμαντος βασιλέως Εὐβοίας: this character is mentioned only by Hesiod (Op. 654) and in passages related to the story of the contest. Plutarch (fr. 84 Sandbach, p. 26) says that Amphidamas died in a sea battle during the Lelantine war. This war was fought between Chalcis and Eretria and it is approximately dated between the end of the eighth and the beginning of the seventh century BC. See Breilich 1961: 47-64 and Parker 1997: 59-93. Hesiod's mention of Amphidamas and Plutarch's claim have also been taken as a chronological clue for Hesiod. However, given the scarcity of precise information on Amphidamas and the Lelantine war, some scholars have doubted the credibility of Plutarch's claim (for discussion see Evelyn-White 1914: XVI, Sinclair 1932: 68, West 1966: 43-4 and 1978: 321, Edwards 1971: 203-4, Fehling 1979, Janko 1982: 94-8, Kivilo 2010: 46, Ercolani 2010: 16, Kōiv 2011). Thucydides shows that this war was perceived as a big event that took place in an undefined past and in which for the first time the rest of the Greek world was divided in alliance with one side or the other (Th. 1.15.3: μάλιστα δὲ ἐς τὸν πάλαι ποτὲ γενόμενον πόλεμον Χαλκιδέων καὶ Ἐρετριῶν καὶ τὸ ἄλλο Ἑλληνικὸν ἐς ξυμμαχίαν ἑκατέρων διέστη). In this respect, regardless of the historical reliability of Plutarch's claim, the Lelantine war may have been perceived in antiquity as an appropriate historical background for the story of the contest of the two greatest poets.

64-6. πάντα τοὺς ἐπισήμους ἄνδρας ... συνεκάλεσεν: this claim highlights the importance of the event. The fact that other competitions besides the poetic one were included in Amphidamas' funeral games is not explicitly claimed in Hesiod's Works and Days but could easily have been inferred from the fact that the poet specifies that he won 'ὕμνῳ' (657), in song, thus not ruling out the possibility of other kind of games. The idea of an opposition between wisdom and physical strength (ῥώμη καὶ τάχει and σοφία, l. 65) appears already in Xenophanes (fr. 2 West) and was a common contrast for Alcidamas: Richardson 1981: 5, and O' Sullivan 1992: 80.

68-70. τοῦ δὲ ἀγῶνος ... τοῦ τετελευτηκότος: the way the judges are introduced creates (unfulfilled) expectations about how the competition will be judged. No one would expect that Panoides, who appears here at the same level as the other notable Chalcideans sitting as judges (μετ' αὐτῶν) and is apparently singled out only as brother of the deceased, will in fact have total decisional power (205-10n.).

69. Πανοίδης: a character who is attested only in texts related to the contest of Homer and Hesiod. In the form given by L (here and in l. 177) it is a speaking name meaning 'All-knowing'. However it is probably used ironically here, as the Certamen does not seem to agree with the final verdict and other texts too show that he became famous precisely because he turned out to be wrong in his judgement (205-10n.). P.Petr. I 25 l. 4 gives Πανήδης and this form has been unanimously used to emend L. But the two forms represent two different attempts at etymologising the name and should both be kept in the text of their respective witnesses. Πανήδης has been interpreted as 'he who enjoys everything' (πᾶν + ἡδύς: see Kirchhoff 1892: 887) and again indicates the king's ineptitude as a judge. Another attested form is Πανίδης (Philostratus, Tzetzes and Michael Apostoles Collectio Paroemiarum). Iotacism alone does not explain the existence of the different forms of the name.

70-2. ἀμφοτέρων δὲ τῶν ποιητῶν ... τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον: the outcome of the contest is well known, and not modifiable. Thus the text reveals it already at the beginning of the account of the competition, focussing thereafter on the way (τρόπον) Hesiod came to win.

72-4. προελθόντα ... Ὅμηρον ἀποκρίνασθαι: the words that describe Hesiod taking centre stage, εἰς τὸ μέσον, are common in the description of performative contexts in antiquity: see Detienne 1990: 83-98 and Ford 2002: 32 (esp. n. 25 for references). The text then briefly explains that, throughout the competition, Hesiod will ask questions and Homer will reply to each of them. This general summary substitutes for more precise indications given in earlier versions before each exchange of verses: cf. P.Petr. I 25. The roles of Homer and Hesiod were different in other accounts of the contest: see Plu. Dinner of the Seven Sages 153a-154f, where Hesiod answers a riddle, and Tzetzes (Life of Hesiod 127 Colonna) who claims that the two poets exchanged improvised verses πρὸς ἀλλήλους, ‘to each other’.

74-89. The first two exchanges of verses are aimed at defining the ‘best’ and the ‘finest’ thing for mortals. These themes are very common in lyric and symposiastic poetry and inform early philosophical enquiry too (Ford 1997: 92-3. See e.g. Sappho fr. 16 Voigt on the κάλλιστον; Plu. Dinner of the Seven Sages 153a for Thales replying to similar questions). Taken together the first two challenges and responses are expressions of common Greek thoughts: Homer claims that the best thing for mortals is not to be born, or to die as soon as possible; the ‘finest’ thing for men, the activity that gives most pleasure to mortals once they are born, is the symposium. From the first few verses, it becomes clear that the hexameters of the Certamen fully draw on the epic tradition. They are created by using a high number of epic formulae and metrical patterns (e.g. the caesura κατὰ τρίτον τροχαῖον, on which see e.g. West 1982: 35-6 and Kirk 1985: 18-24). Sometimes traditional or very popular verses are quoted too. The passage can also be taken as evidence for the quotation of Homeric verses in symposiastic contexts.

75. υἱὲ Μέλητος ... εἰδώς: the expression υἱὲ Μέλητος Ὅμηρε is created on the model of similar invocations of epic heroes: Ἀτρείος υἱέ (Agamemnon: e.g. Il. 2.23); Τυδέος υἱέ (Diomedes: e.g. Il. 4.370); υἱέ Πριάμοιο (Hector: e.g. Il. 7.47); Μενoitίου υἱέ (Patroclus: e.g. Il. 9.202); Πηληῖος υἱέ (Achilles: e.g. Il. 16.21). υἱὲ Μέλητος is also at 151 and parallels ἔκγονε Δίου (i.e. son of Dios) used by Homer for Hesiod at 156. For Homer as the son of the river Meles see 9-10n.; θεῶν ἄπο μήδεα εἰδώς in the second half of the hexameter is formulaic too (Od.

6.12, Hes. fr. 136.12 M.-W.). Both parts of the verse highlight Homer's divine nature.

76. εἴπ' ἄγε μοι ... βροτοῖσιν: the actual question is contained in the last part of the couplet while the first part of this hexameter is again created by using formulaic expressions: εἴπ' ἄγε μοι is used at the beginning of the hexameter in e.g. Il. 3.192. Πάμπρωτα is in connection with καὶ τοῦτο (81) that follows the second instance of εἴπ' ἄγε μοι ('come, tell me first of all' ... 'come, tell me this too'). The expression φέρτατόν βροτοῖσιν provides a metrically suitable substitute for the corresponding words in the verses that Homer uses to answer, ἐπιχθονίοισιν ἄριστον.

78-9. ἀρχὴν μὲν μὴ φῦναι ... Αἶδαο περῆσαι: Homer replies with traditional verses. They are first attested in Theognis (425-8, with added pentameters) but Campbell 1983: 23 suggests that Theognis might have taken the hexameter lines from an earlier source. They are widely attested in several sources: for a list see West 1971, apparatus ad Thgn. 425 ff. More generally, the concept they express was very common (see e.g. S. OC 1225-7, B. 5.160-2). The wide circulation of these verses and ideas certainly explains Homer's success in this stage of the competition (Il. 90-94), and the very fact that Homer pronounces them makes him a repository for wisdom in the Certamen. The presence of this couplet in P.Petr. I 25 (Il. 12-15) proves that it was connected to the story of the contest between Homer and Hesiod at least by the third century BC, but the connection may well be even older: the couplet is quoted by Stobaeus (4.52.22) under the lemma ἔπαινος θανάτου as coming ἐκ Ἀλκιδάμαντος Μουσείου and on the basis of this quotation Nietzsche (1870 and 1873) found in Alcidamas' Musaion the source for the agonistic section of the Certamen (for a more sceptical view see Muir 2001: xix). Theognis' version has πάντων at the beginning of the couplet, while all the passages that connect these verses to the contest story (implicitly, i.e. Stobaeus, or explicitly, i.e. Certamen and P.Petr. I 25) transmit the reading ἀρχήν. For detailed discussion see Nietzsche 1870: 536, Busse 1909: 113

n. 1, Wilamowitz 1916b: 401, Vogt 1959: 196 and 202. ὅμως is only in the Certamen, but the emendation in ὅπως (see apparatus) is unnecessary. For πύλας Αἶδαο περῆσαι cf. Il. 5.646: πύλας Αἶδαο περῆσειν; Il. 23.71: πύλας Αἶδαο περῆσω.

81. εἴπ' ἄγε μοι ... Ὅμηρε: for the first half of the hexameter see 76n. The second part is used to address Homer with another formulaic epithet, θεοῖς ἐπιείκελος. This epithet, found always in the same position in the hexameter, is used in Homeric poetry for Achilles (θεοῖς ἐπιείκελ' Ἀχιλλεῦ: e.g. Il. 9.485) and in Hesiod is found in the forms θεοῖς ἐπιείκελα τέκνα and θεοῖς ἐπιείκελον ἄνδρα (Th. 963, 987 and 1020). Homer's divine nature is again emphasised (see also 75n.).

82. τί θνητοῖς ... εἶναι: Hesiod's new question centers on the theme of the 'finest thing' for men. The emendation θνητοῖς κάλλιστον (first proposed by Rzach on the basis of the corresponding papyrus reading), in place of θνητοῖσιν ἄριστον of the manuscript, is here accepted. Homer has already defined the 'best thing' (ἄριστον) for men in the first session: it would make no sense for Hesiod to ask again the same question and for Homer to give a different answer. ἄριστον may be due to the influence of the same word at 78. See also commentary on P.Petr. I 25, 17-19.

84-9. ὅππότε ἂν εὐφροσύνη ... εἶδεται εἶναι: the verses used for Homer's response to Hesiod's challenge are a description of feasting taken from Odyssey 9.6-11, although this work has not been composed yet at this point in the narrative: see 275-6n. These verses in their original context start off Odysseus' speech, when Alcinous invites him to reveal his identity and tell his story. In the Certamen Homer's choice of performing these verses is a guarantee of success for him (see 90-4 for the audience's reaction), for they express another common Greek view (cf. Heldmann 1982: 77: 'typisch griechische Lebensfreude und Diesseitigkeit'). In antiquity these Homeric lines were often seen as problematic and criticised (e.g. Plato, R. 390a-b) and were very famous and widely quoted and discussed (see Hillgruber 1999: 335-6, Pontani 2005: 236 n. 232). Heubeck and Hoekstra 1989: 12 also remark that the scene depicted by Odysseus, ‘the joyful, lavish banquet is an outward and visible sign of a stable and peacefully ordered community as exemplified by the Phaeacian utopia’: Homer, by choosing to perform these verses in reply to Hesiod’s question, appears as a supporter of the social order that they signify. This image of Homer will be central in the exchanges at 151-75. Like the verses of the previous answer, these verses too were certainly connected to the contest story by the third century BC (P.Petr. I 25), and also in this case the connection may go as far as back as Alcidamas’ Museion. The beginning of this passage has been adapted in the Certamen to the new context: while in the Odyssey the first verse starts with ἢ ὅτ’ εὐφροσύνη (connected to the comparative in the previous verse: οὐ γὰρ ἐγώ γέ τί φημι τέλος χαριέστερον εἶναι) the quotation here begins with ὁππότ’ ἂν εὐφροσύνη. In the last verse, the papyrus reads φαίνεται while both the Certamen and the vulgata of the Odyssey read εἶδεται.

90-4. ῥηθέντων δὲ ... προκατεύχεσθαι πάντας: the position of prominence that Homer will hold throughout the competition is asserted already after the first round. The reaction of the public highlights some of the most important features of Homer as depicted in the Certamen: the ability to provoke wonder and amazement in the public, the obvious appeal to a Panhellenic audience, and the fact that his performance is used as aetiology for future festivals and performances in antiquity.

90-1. ῥηθέντων δὲ τῶν ἐπῶν: most editors added τούτων after δέ on the basis of the papyrus reading, but this seems unnecessary.

οὕτω σφοδρῶς φασι θαυμασθῆναι: θαῦμα appears from the beginning as a prominent feature of Homeric poetry: it is a reaction that Homer will inspire throughout the contest and will lead the public to ask for him to be awarded the victory (205-6: θαυμάσαντες δὲ καὶ ἐν τούτῳ τὸν Ὅμηρον οἱ Ἕλληνες ἐπῆνουν). Reactions to poetic performances are described in similar terms already in the Odyssey (see e.g. Od. 1.325-6 and 1.339-40; more references and discussion in Lanata 1963: 8-9 and Ford 1992: 51-2) and in other Homeric biographies (Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 5 12, 22, 36). θαῦμα is an important idea in Alcidas' stylistic theory too (O' Sullivan 1992: 74) and he attributes it explicitly to Homer: P.Mich. inv. 2754, ll. 15-18: Ὅμηρος γοῦν διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ζῶν καὶ ἀποθανῶν τετίμηται παρὰ πάσιν ἀνθρώποις.

τοὺς στίχους: the manuscript reading τὰ ἔπη causes a grammatical problem with the following χρυσοῦς αὐτοῦς (91-2). Rzach's emendation τοὺς στίχους (on the basis of the papyrus) is the most convincing solution proposed (better than Nietzsche's αὐτοῦς <στίχους>). The manuscript reading may be simply due to the influence of the previous τῶν ἐπῶν.

ὑπὸ τῶν Ἑλλήνων: by calling the public that is attending the contest 'the Greeks' (cf. also l. 176 'οἱ μὲν Ἕλληνες πάντες' and l. 205) the Certamen parallels the claims of Homer's Panhellenism made at the opening of the text on biographical grounds (dispute over his birthplace: see 7-8n.). P.Mich. inv. 2754 offers a similar assessment (17-19: Ὅμηρος γοῦν διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ζῶν καὶ ἀποθανῶν τετίμηται παρὰ πάσιν ἀνθρώποις. Cf. also τῶν Ἑλλήνων at l. 22 of the same papyrus) thus showing that this idea was supported by Alcidas too.

91-2. ὥστε χρυσοῦς αὐτοῦς προσαγορευθῆναι: the definition of Od. 9.5-11 as 'golden verses' is attested only here and in P.Petr. I 25, 31-2, and it is not possible to know whether it goes back to Alcidas, or to an earlier source (see Kaiser 1964: 213-14, with references at p. 214 n. 3). It is nevertheless clear in meaning and based on traditional elements. It recalls the definition of χρυσέα ἔπη for Pythagoras' words, for example. The metaphorical use of the adjective χρύσεος is already attested in epic poetry (e.g. referred to Aphrodite: Il. 3.64; Od. 8.337) and, perhaps more pertinently, Homer himself is called 'golden' (Tz. Life of Hesiod 141 Colonna: Ὅμηρος γὰρ ὁ χρυσοῦς; Anon. Vit. Hom. 2.2 and Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.4 (= AP 11.442): ἡμέτερος γὰρ κείνος ὁ χρύσεος ἦν πολίτης).

92-4. καὶ ἔτι καὶ νῦν ... προκατεύχεσθαι πάντας: Homeric poetry was recited on public sacrifices and banquets (see e.g. Pl. Ion 535d) but there is no evidence for such performances of this specific passage. It is therefore impossible to know whether this claim was inspired by actual performative experiences or not, but it surely fits the habit of the Certamen to use (or perhaps create) myths on performances by Homer as aetiology for other (actual?) festivals and sacrifices: cf. Homer at Argos, at 302-8. Such claims emphasise the persistence of Homer's legacy. There is no space in the papyrus for καὶ ἔτι καὶ νῦν and it may be an attempt by the author of the Certamen to make his sources seem relevant to his own time (discussion in Wilamowitz 1916b: 401 n. 1 and Vogt 1959: 216 n. 65).

94. ὁ δὲ Ἡσίοδος ἀχθεσθεὶς ἐπὶ τῇ Ὀμήρου εὐημερίᾳ: this description of Hesiod's reaction to Homer's success starts depicting a great contrast between the two poets. From here onwards Hesiod will appear keener than Homer on quarrels and competition (see also 148-50n.), and this will be in striking contrast to the grounds on which Panoides will issue his judgement (205-10n.).

95. ἐπὶ τῶν ἀπόρων ὥρμησεν ἐπερώτησιν: the contest moves on to a more difficult challenge: a question to which there seems to be no possible answer. Such challenges are found in a variety of contexts in ancient Greece (e.g. Heracl. fr. 18 D.-K., Plu. Alex. 64). In Alcidamas' On Sophists the word ἀπορία is used to describe the condition in which those who are used to written speeches find themselves when it comes to speak on the spot (Soph. 8, 15, 16, 21; in contrast with εὐπορία, see Soph. 3, 6, 13, 19, 24, 34): for him, therefore, the fact that Homer does not find himself in an aporetic situation, but is able to solve challenges immediately, may be a relevant illustration of good rhetorical performance.

97-101. Μοῦσ' ἄγε μοι ... περὶ νίκης: Homer is asked not to talk about anything that is, was or shall be and replies by giving a negative prophecy: there will never be funeral games for Zeus, as he is an immortal god. Plutarch mentions this part of the contest as the decisive one in his account of the story; the question is set forth by Lesches, while Hesiod has to reply and is consequently awarded the victory; Plutarch's version of the question contains no 'difficulty' (Dinner of the Seven Sages 153f-154a, see Introduction).

97-8. Μοῦσ' ἄγε μοι ... σὺ δ' ἄλλης μνήσαι ἀοιδῆς: the ability to know present, past and future is usually connected to the Muses and their ability to sing everything: for the formula τά τ' ἐόντα τά τ' ἐσσόμενα πρό τ' ἐόντα see e.g. Hes. Th. 38; cf. also [Hes.] fr. 204.113 M.-W. (see West 1966: 166). The same ability is attributed with the same words to the seer Chalcas as well (Il. 1.70) and the scholium to Th. 32 (where the formula appears in a shortened version) makes it clear that poets and prophets are similar in that both categories are divinely inspired. Therefore the presence of this formula (although reversed, as Homer is asked to sing nothing that is, shall be, or was, but rather 'another song') together with Homer's ability to answer such question, outlines once again Homer's divine inspiration. For Alcidas, this section of the contest may have been particularly significant as an expression of another key point of his literary theory: the freedom to choose any subject for a declamation (in response e.g. to the attack put forth by Isocrates (Hel. 11; see O'Sullivan 1992: 83). Μοῦσ' ἄγε μοι is not formulaic but it may have been constructed on the model of εἴπ' ἄγε μοι (76) with the addition of an invocation to the Muses since the formula that follows, as mentioned above, is often connected to them. The second verse too is reminiscent of the epic formulaic vocabulary. Collins 2004: 104 sees in μηδὲν ἄειδε a parodic reference to the Homeric μῆνιν ἄειδε (Il. 1.1); σὺ δ' ἄλλης μνήσαι ἀοιδῆς is an adaptation of the verse that closes many Homeric Hymns (αὐτὰρ ἐγὼ καὶ σεῖο καὶ ἄλλης μνήσομ' ἀοιδῆς. See e.g. h.Hom. 2.495, 3.546).

100-1. οὐδέ ποτ' ἄμφι Διὸς ... ἐρίζοντες περὶ νίκης: the funeral games for an immortal god are something that cannot exist at any present, past or future times. Homer here supports the traditional image of the gods presented in his work, against a long tradition of attacks, and alternative versions. There was a well-developed debate about the existence of a tomb of Zeus in Crete and this debate can be traced back to the fourth century BC (Kokolakis 1995: 125; complete list of references in Cook 1914: 157-63 and 1925: 940-3) – although the debate flares up in the Hellenistic period: Callimachus (Jov. 4-7) and Euhemerus (T 69 A in Winiarczyk 1991). Homer in the Certamen goes back to the topic of Zeus' immortality at 122-3 (where Hesiod provokingly mentions the 'white bones of dead Zeus') and defends another orthodox view on the gods when he denies the possibility of Artemis' marriage at 117-18. The tomb of Zeus seems to have been a topic for declamations, even if there is only one late witness for this: Philostr. VS 2.4.569-570. O' Sullivan's suggestion about the significance of this exchange of verses for Alcidas (see 97-8) finds perhaps some confirmation in Philostratus.

102-37. Because of Homer's success in solving the ἄπορον question, Hesiod turns to a more difficult challenge, the 'ambiguous proposition'. Hesiod's challenges are ambiguous in that they present, more or less explicitly, improper views on issues that mattered to the Greeks: the life and behaviour of heroes (e.g. 107), the enemies of the Greeks (e.g. 109), the nature and behaviour of the gods (e.g. 117). Sometimes the exchanges of verses also reflect points of disagreement between Homeric and Hesiodic poetry (e.g. 113-14). Thematic connections marking the transition between groups of exchanges (a series of verses is on banquets, another on men and women, another on water and navigation) may have helped in memorizing the sequence. Homer turns Hesiod's claims into the expression of a common Greek thought by adding a new line that enjambs an element of Hesiod's and changes its meaning. Some of the hexameter material was circulating by Alcidas' time and may have been known to him: ll. 107-8 are transmitted in Aristophanes' Peace, performed in 421 BC; furthermore, as has been noted, in terms of content the challenges in this section are often sophistic in flavour and may represent fifth century BC concerns about Homeric language (see e.g. 113-14n). For Sophistic approaches to archaic epic see: Richardson 1975, Ford 2002: 80, Morgan: 2000 esp. 89-132, Koning 2010: 111-15 and 217-23, Boys-Stones 2010: 40-8. Sophistic influences are apparent in terms of syntax too: Homer is forced to introduce into hexameter poetry complicated syntactical structures reminiscent of sophistic prose, in order to present a complete 'proper' thought. Most epic hexameters stand on their own in terms of both syntax and meaning; similarly, Hesiod's verses in the Certamen stand on their own grammatically (most of them are main clauses, and have all the elements necessary to work syntactically) and express ideas that can be conceived in principle (for example, a tradition on Zeus' mortality: see 100-1 n.). While in the Homeric poems enjambment in most cases is used to expand or elaborate the thought expressed in the previous line ('progressive' enjambment), sometimes a Homeric runover line has a stronger connection with the previous one, and in extreme cases it may contain an element that is necessary for the first line to make sense, or even to correct a statement which may be problematic at the level of content (e.g. Il. 5.339-40: ...ῥέε δ' ἄμβροτον αἶμα θεοῖο / ἰχώρ, οἶός περ τε ῥέει μακάρεσσι θεοῖσιν). Similarly, Hesiod's lines too are problematic at the level of content and correction is provided by an enjambment. Yet, unlike in the Iliadic lines, the impropriety is resolved at the level of syntax: in other words, Homer gives Hesiod's line a new syntactical structure by reinterpreting it as requiring 'necessary enjambment'. The final result is that each 'proper' unit of thought is now contained in two lines, rather than in one, as is generally the case in the Homeric poems. Possibilities inherent in the Homeric tradition (the practice of the 'necessary' enjambment and the possibility of using enjambment correctively) are in these lines set in dialogue with new intellectual developments. For studies on the Homeric enjambments see e.g. Parry 1971, Kirk 1966, Higbie 1990, Bakker 1990, Clark 1997. For an analysis of the practice of capping verses in performance and in different literary genres see Collins 2004.

105-6. ἔστιν οὖν ... Ἡσιόδου: in the manuscript the verses are reported in succession, two per line, with no indication of the speaker and no separation between the different exchanges. This is the only guideline for the attribution of verses to each speaker and will turn out to be not detailed enough (see esp. 133-7n). It is a sign of the text's tendency towards conciseness (contrast P.Petr. I 25).

107-8. δεῖπνον ... κορέσθην: in Hesiod's verse the heroes are said to be eating beef and necks of horses. Homer corrects Hesiod's improper suggestion about eating necks of horses, which is reminiscent of barbarian, rather than Greek, food habits (Collins 2004: 187), by enjambling καὶ χένας ἵππων with another verb, ἔκλυον, the heroes turn out to dine on beef, and cleanse the horses' necks of sweat, as they were sated with war. The couplet is transmitted, with variants, in Aristophanes' Peace 1282-3. There, it is not used as an example of ἀμφίβολος γνώμη (the two verses are recited by the same character and the first verse is not seen as problematic), but offers the opportunity for a comic response by another character (Son of Lamachus: ὥς οἱ μὲν δαίνυντο βοῶν κρέα, καὶ χένας ἵππων / ἔκλυον ἰδρώοντας, ἐπεὶ πολέμου ἐκόρεσθεν. Trygaeus: εἶεν; ἐκόρεσθεν τοῦ πολέμου καὶ τ' ἥσθιον / ταῦτ' ἄδε, ταῦθ', ὥς ἥσθιον κεκορημένοι), on which see Sommerstein 1985: 194 and Olson 1998: 308. The mention of these verses in Peace, performed for the first time in 421 BC, shows that at least some of the hexameters contained in the Certamen pre-date Alcidamas. It is also possible that Aristophanes was aware that the couplet was connected to the story of the contest of Homer and Hesiod. On a general level, both Aristophanes and the Certamen present the couplet in contexts where the opposition between poetry of war and poetry of peace is a core issue; many of the verses mentioned in the passage from Peace come from Homeric poetry (cf. also Richardson 1981: 2); the incipit of Aristophanes' quotation, ὥς οἱ μὲν δαίνυντο, is also transmitted in the Certamen in another passage connected to a feasting scene (119); hence Aristophanes may have been aware of a collection of verses similar to that in the Certamen. The whole scene in Peace, then, starts by quoting at l. 1270 another verse transmitted in the Certamen as well, the incipit of the Epigoni (259; the scholium to Aristophanes attributes the Epigoni to Antimachus, while the Certamen attributes it to Homer; cf. Di Benedetto 1969: 161 and 259n.). Even more interestingly, Aristophanes seems to echo, in his re-enactment of a contest between a poet of peace and a poet of war, the same poetic strategies Homer and Hesiod use in this section of the Certamen. At Peace 1270 the boy begins the verse, which is completed by Trygaeus, who adds a new one, so that the previous' speaker's words are reversed: Π. Α': νῦν αὖθ' ὀπλοτέρων ἀνδρῶν ἀρχώμεθα- TP. Παῦσαι, / ὀπλοτέρους ἄδον, καὶ ταῦτ', ὦ τρισκακόδαιμον,/ εἰρήνης οὔσης (the Certamen transmits Μοῦσα instead of the Aristophanic παῦσαι; for a similar poetic game see also Peace 1286-1287). The description of a cruel battle at vv. 1273-8, 'a slight misquotation from Il. 4.446-9' (Sommerstein 1985: 194), echoes Homer's finest passage in the Certamen (176-204). For discussion see also Meyer 1892: 377, Busse 1909: 108-19, Kirk 1950: 150, Compton Engle 1999: 327-8. Alcidas therefore can have been responsible neither for the insertion of these hexameters within the contest story, nor the invention of the story itself. The hexameter at 108 as it stands in the manuscript does not scan. Emending πτολέμου in πολέμοιο seems the most convenient solution: while πολέμοιο is a very common epic form, πτολέμου is rarer and never found in this metrical position. Aristophanes' πολέμου ἐκόρεσθεν is fifth-century language and may be Aristophanes' own adaptation of the epic forms πολέμοιο and κορέσθην (e.g. Od. 4.541); it should not be used to emend the manuscript (against Wilamowitz). βοῶν κρέα in this metrical position and καὶ χένας ἵππων are not Homeric.

109-10. καὶ Φρύγες ... δόρπον ἐλέσθαι: Hesiod's verse claims that the Phrygians are the best people at navigation. Homer's answer is difficult and different interpretations have been proposed, where the dative ἀνδράσι ληιστῆρσιν is given different meaning and function: Evelyn-White translates ‘to filch their dinner from pirates on the beach’ and Collins ‘among thieves to take their dinner on the shore’. Wilamowitz suggests the emendation δόρπα πένεσθαι (based on Il. 24.444) and he is followed by West who translates ‘at preparing supper on shore for a pirate crew’. In any case, by giving this answer Homer achieves two goals. First, he denies the Phrygians’ maritime supremacy: in the Iliad (e.g. 2.862-3) they were not a maritime force, so ἐπ’ ἀκτῆς is a more appropriate location for them than ἐπὶ νηυσίν. Second, by associating them with pirates and possibly making them stealing food, he presents them in an overall negative light. In this respect Homer expresses a typically Greek attitude toward these people and consequently is able to gather approval among his Greek audience. The Phrygians were allies of the Trojans, and in the Athens of the fifth century BC these two names were interchangeable. The Phrygians were also associated with cruelty, luxury and cowardice (see Hall 1988 and 1989: 38-9, Erskine 2001: 73-4, West 2003: 329, Collins 2004: 187, Bryce 2006: 140-2). καὶ Φρύγες at the beginning of verse is also at Il. 10.431; ληιστῆρσιν is in the same position at Od. 16.424; δόρπον ἐλέσθαι recalls δόρπον ἔλοντο at Od. 14.347.

111-12. χερσὶ ... τόξα: in Hesiod’s verse someone (as yet unspecified) is said to shoot arrows at the Giants with his hands, χερσὶ. Homer solves the problem by linking χερσὶ to ἀπέλυσεν (ἀπ’ ὤμων καμπύλα τόξα): with his hands Heracles undoes the bow from his shoulders, and then uses it to shoot arrows. The Giants are described as δολίχ’ ἔγχεα χερσὶν ἔχοντας by Hesiod (Th. 186) and this may explain why the difficulty of Hesiod’s verse is based precisely on the word χερσὶ. This exchange seems to refer to the Gigantomachy, the battle between gods and Giants in which Heracles helped the gods; in epic, the episode is mentioned, or alluded to, at Th. 954 and Hes. fr. 43a.65 M.-W. (see West 1966: 419 and Clay 2003: 113-15). In the manuscript the verses are presented in the opposite sequence to this edition: it seems necessary to reverse the order, as proposed first by Nietzsche, because at 112 there is no apparent difficulty that could be solved by any element in the previous line. Line 111 as it is transmitted in L does not scan, but it seems sufficient to emend ὅλων in ὅλων. The dative ἰοῖσιν does not necessarily need to be emended to its accusative form (see apparatus) because this would require, for metrical reasons, a further emendation (οὔλον and ἀνόμων). καμπύλα τόξα is formulaic and often occurs in the same metrical position as at 112 (e.g. Il. 3.17).

113-14. οὔτος ... γυναιξίν: this couplet starts off a series of verses about the theme of the union between man and woman. Hesiod is applying two opposite adjectives to the same person: a man is said to be the son of a ‘good and cowardly’ man. Homer enjambes the second adjective, ἀνάλκιδος, with a new, feminine name, μητρός, so that the man is now said to be the son of a good man and a cowardly mother: war, as Homer explains, is hard for all women. The play on the double value of the adjective ἄναλκις may reflect early fifth-century concerns about Homeric language. Protagoras (A 28 D.-K.) remarked that the word μῆνιν because of its meaning should be masculine, but Homer uses it as feminine (Graziosi 2001: 67). In this exchange Homer is using language properly, because ἄναλκις is an adjective for women, not for the Homeric ἀγαθὸς ἀνὴρ. For such man, ἀλκή is an important martial quality (Kirk 1990: 97), while ἄναλκις is strongly connected to inability in war (together with ἀπτόλεμος: Il. 2.201; 9.35; 9.41), and it is usually applied to warriors as a rebuke (e.g. the formulaic κακὸν καὶ ἀνάλκιδα, on which see below); or indeed to women, as in the present couplet after Homer’s contribution: ἄναλκις is used in connection with Aphrodite when Diomedes recognizes her in Il. 5.330-2 and is used of women more generally at Il. 5.349. The verse as proposed by Hesiod and the way Homer corrects it also seem to reflect two different views, one more Hesiodic and the other more Homeric, on what an ἀγαθὸς ἀνὴρ is, for, unlike the Homeric poetry, Hesiod does not emphasise ability in war as a necessary requirement for good men. For his verse Hesiod reverses a Homeric formula, found always in the same metrical position: ἀγαθοῦ καὶ ἀνάλκιδος instead of the Homeric κακὸν καὶ ἀνάλκιδα (Il. 8.153; 14.126) and κακὸν καὶ ἄναλκιν (Od. 3.375).

115-16. οὐτ' ἄρ ... Ἀφροδίτην: according to Hesiod's verse, in order to conceive a child (σοί, 'for you', 'to have you') a father and a mother did not have a physical union (οὐτ' ἄρ ... ἐμίγη). It is not precisely clear how the syntactic connection between this and the following verse works and the text of Homer's answer seems corrupt. It seems though that the key element for Homer's solution is διὰ χρυσοῦν Ἀφροδίτην: i.e. the body was sowed 'by the action of golden Aphrodite', presented as a substitute for physical union. The couplet may be centered on a parodic use of the formulaic διὰ χρυσοῦν Ἀφροδίτην (cf. also LfgrE) and may point to ancient and now lost discussions about this formula. That phrase is generally used in epic in the opposite sense to Homer's answer, that is as a metaphor for sexual union. The fact that the formula occurs only in Hesiod (Th. 822; 962; 1005; 1014; fr. 23a.35 M.-W.; fr. 221.3 M.-W.; for discussion see West 1966: 78 and 398) and is here pronounced by Homer may also suggest that it is the point of the discussion in this exchange. Πατήρ ἐμίγη καὶ πότνια μήτηρ is built on the Homeric πατήρ καὶ πότνια μήτηρ which occurs both in the Iliad (e.g. Il. 9.561) and in the Odyssey (e.g. Od. 6.30). The emendation αὐτὰρ (Rzach, Evelyn-White), which eliminates the negation οὐτε at the beginning of the verse, does not clarify the meaning of the couplet, nor does the translation proposed by Evelyn-White (who accepts it): 'But for you, your father and lady mother lay in love – / when they begot you by the aid of golden Aphrodite'. West gives yet a different meaning to the first verse, but by putting σῶμα τό γ' ἐσπείραντο between crucis does not offer a definitive solution: 'Nor with you your father and lady mother make love – / †the body which† they sowed through golden Aphrodite'. Both the manuscript reading ἐσπείραντο and the emendation proposed σπείραντε are unattested forms.

117-18. αὐτὰρ ... βιοῖ<ο>: this couplet closes the series of verses about men and

women. δμήθη γάμω, cannot be allowed to refer to the virgin goddess Artemis, as Hesiod's verse implies. Homer's contribution clarifies that it was Callisto who got married, and for this reason Artemis shot her with an arrow. Homer is referring here to the story of Callisto, friend and hunting companion of Artemis, told in different versions (listed in LFGRE s.v. Καλλιστώ). She had sworn to preserve her virginity in honour of Artemis but was seduced by Zeus, and as a punishment she was either transformed into a bear or, as in this couplet, killed by Artemis. This exchange too may be seen as reflecting fifth-century Sophistic concerns about Homeric language (Graziosi 2001: 66-7). Homer's answer suggests solving the impropriety by means of a different distribution of words among the sentences in the couplet – that is, moving an imaginary comma from the end of the verse to after γάμω; in a similar vein, a fragment from Democritus (fr. 22 D.-K.) deals with the possibility of alternative word division in the Homeric poems. Ἀρτεμις ἰοχέαιρα (or its accusative form) is formulaic (e.g. Il. 5.53, Hes. Th. 14) and generally occurs at the end of the hexameter. ἀπ' ἀργυρέοιο βιοῖο occurs only once in epic, at Il. 24.605 (but cf. Il. 1.49: ἀργυρέοιο βιοῖο) and refers to Apollo rather than Artemis. Nevertheless, in Il. 24.605 too it is closely connected to the formula Ἀρτεμις ἰοχέαιρα (found in the next verse) and introduced by the same verb (πέφνεν) as in this couplet: Il. 24.605-6: τοὺς μὲν Ἀπόλλων πέφνεν ἀπ' ἀργυρέοιο βιοῖο / χώμενος Νιόβη, τὰς δ' Ἀρτεμις ἰοχέαιρα.

119-20. ὥς οἱ μὲν ... Ἀγαμέμνων: the poets deal again with the topic of feasting. Homer corrects the absurd suggestion that the heroes 'feasted throughout the day with no food' by saying that they had no food 'of their own' (οἰκοθεν), but it was provided by Agamemnon. Through this exchange of verses Homer and Hesiod are presenting and defending their different conceptions of feasting, food, and society. Hesiod's verse may be an exaggeration of the frugality advocated in the Works and Days (see e.g. vv. 40-1: νήπιοι, οὐδὲ ἴσασιν ὅσῳ πλέον ἥμισυ παντὸς / οὐδ' ὅσον ἐν μαλάχῃ τε καὶ ἀσφοδέλω μέγ' ὄνειαρ), while Homer transforms this couplet into a typically Homeric scene of feasting. The visible difference is Agamemnon's generous behaviour: the only banquet offered by Agamemnon in the Homeric poems is in Il. 9.89-91, where he is said to invite the Achean leaders (for feasting in Homer see Foley 1999: 169-200; list of Homeric feasting episodes in Foley 1999: 272-3). Perhaps not surprisingly, the Certamen uses here the highly formulaic epithet ἄναξ ἀνδρῶν for Agamemnon, which is also found later in that Iliadic passage (at Il. 9.96). The exchange also looks like a comment on the question of how the heroes support themselves, as they are never seen to work, while according to the Hesiodic ideal of self-sufficiency, one cannot eat without working and it is a bad idea to rely on gift-eating kings, or even on neighbours. Homer transforms this couplet into a typically Homeric scene of royal patronage, as the food was provided by Agamemnon.

121-3. δειπνον ... ἀντιθέοιο: in Hesiod's verses it is said that after feasting the heroes looked for the bones of the dead Zeus among the sooty ashes. But Homer, who cannot accept the idea of Zeus' mortality (see also 115-16n. on another theological impropriety, and 100-1n. on the tomb of Zeus), connects the genitive Διός with παιδός and thereby specifies that the bones are those of Sarpedon, the mortal son of Zeus, and not those of the god himself. Sarpedon's death causes much grief to Zeus in the Iliad (16.419-683), and the episode was also popular on vases (LIMC s.v. Sarpedon). On Sarpedon see Clay 2008-2009; more specifically on Sarpedon's death see Nagy 1983. For the first time Hesiod's question takes up two lines (cf. 105-6). Hesiod's first verse (121) also contains a difficulty, which is solved by Hesiod's own second verse (122). According to 121 the heroes are actually said to be feasting among the sooty ashes: the second verse connects more suitably the sooty ashes with another action, the search of bones. The fact that the bones are said to be those of Zeus brings about a second difficulty, which the next verse solves as explained above. In this context, according to the statement of the text at 105-6, we have to see in 121-2 Hesiod's question, and in 123 Homer's answer (and in this case Evelyn-White's translation of 101-2, which leaves out the difficulty and solution contained in these two verses and focuses on 122-3, seems very appropriate: 'When they had feasted, they gathered among the glowing ashes the bones of the dead Zeus – / born Sarpedon, that bold and godlike man'). In other contexts, though, we may imagine that the verses were distributed in a different way, as a back and forth, or even between a number of speakers, as follows: Speaker A: l. 121; Speaker B: l.122; Speaker A or C: l. 123 (see also West 1967: 441). The phrase ἐνὶ σποδῶ αἰθαλόεσση is not epic (but cf. Il. 18.23; Od. 24.316: αἰθαλόεσσαν at the end of the verse). ὅστέα λευκά is in the same metrical position in Hes. Th. 540, 555 and 557 (cf. also Il. 16.347, 23.252, and Emp. fr. 96.19 at the end of the verse; Il. 24.793 at the beginning of the verse). ἀντίθεος is a common epithet for Sarpedon (e.g. Il. 5.629) although never used in the same case and metrical position, while ὑπέρθυμος is never connected to him. κατατεθνηῶτος is not attested in epic, where there is the form κατατεθνηῶτος (e.g. Il. 7.89, also in the same metrical position); but this is not a sufficient ground for an emendation (see apparatus).

124-6. ἡμεῖς ... δολιχάλους: a new theme links, from now onwards, the last group of verses: water and navigation. As in the previous exchange (121-3), Hesiod asks his question in two verses and Homer replies with one. This too may be a double riddle (that is, the first verse presents a difficulty that the second verse of the question itself seems to solve) but the text is quite unclear. At 124, ἄμ πεδίον ('over the plain') is improperly accompanied by ἡμενοι ('sitting') instead of a verb of motion as would be required (cf. the instances of ἄμ πεδίον in the Iliad: 5.87, 5.96, 23.464). This is provided at 125 (ἴομεν), but in this new line there is nothing that attaches to ἡμενοι (cf. also West 1967: 441 n. 1). For this reason, it has been proposed that after 124 a line attributed to Homer has fallen out. In any case, Homer's skills are put to test on the basis of the difficulty at 125. The paradox contained in the new line is that ὁδόν seems to be the object of ἀμφ' ὤμοισιν ἔχοντες (carrying the road on their shoulders?).

Hence Homer in his line gives a new object to the verb ἔχοντες, and leaves ὁδόν in connection with ἵομεν ('we walk our way'; cf. also Hdt. 6.34: ἰόντες τὴν ἰοῖν ὁδόν). 'Hilted swords and long-socketed javelins' seems an obvious continuation for Homer, as in Homeric poetry ἀμφ' ὤμοισιν is often connected to weapons (cf. Il. 2.45, 3.328, 11.527). φάσγανα occurs only three times in Homer (Il. 15.713, Od. 16.295, Od. 22.74) and only once with κωπήεντα (this adjective is more often connected to ξίφος). αἰγανέας δολιχάλους is Homeric and occurs in the same metrical position at Od. 9.156.

127-8. δὴ τότε ἄριστῆες ... ὠκύαλον ναῦν: the problem proposed by Hesiod's verse lies in the expression χεῖρεσσι θαλάσσης ('with hands of/from the sea'). Homer enjambes it with elements that change its function within the sentence: with their hands the boys tear off (ἀπείρυσαν) from the sea a speedy ship (ὠκύαλον ναῦν). In this exchange of verses there may be a reference to the problem of personification of rivers, such as the Scamander in Il. 21.136-60. In this passage the river Scamander is angry at Achilles because the hero has thrown many bodies of Trojan warriors into his water. The river is repeatedly said to talk to Achilles, and to chase him with its water, but in one particular verse its human appearance is explicitly mentioned: v. 213, ἀνέρι εἰσάμενος, βαθέης δ' ἐκ φθέγξατο δίνης. Interestingly, this verse is omitted in some of the manuscripts of the Iliad, which may point to the fact that an anthropomorphic appearance of the river god may have been seen as problematic. This verse, certainly known to Aristarchus (cf. scholia ad loc.), was either included in later times because 'it was thought that the river god could not address Akhilleus unless he took human form', as Richardson 1993: 71 observes, or omitted precisely because the river god was thought not to be human in form. The expression ἄριστῆες κοῦροι is not attested in Homeric or Hesiodic poetry (but cf. Hes. fr. 1.2-3 M.-W.: Μοῦσαι Ὀλυμπιάδε[ς], κοῦραι Διὸς αἰγιόχοιο / αἶ τότε ἄρισται ἔσαν), while ἄσμενοι is found at the beginning of verse, in the formulaic ἄσμενοι ἐκ θανάτοιο, at Od. 9.63, 9.566, 10.134; ἐσσυμένως is suitable in most metrical positions: it is found in the same position as in this couplet at Od. 9.73 and 16.51; ὠκύαλον ναῦν at the end of verse is found, in the metrically equivalent nominative form, at Od. 12.182 and 15.473.

129-30. κολχίδ' ... ἀθέμιστον: Medea, the Colchian maid, was taken away from King Aietes, but there is no mention of King Aietes himself being borne away, as Hesiod's verse suggests. Through Homer's reply Αἰήτην βασιλῆα becomes the object of φεῦγον: they bore away the Colchian maid, and fled King Aietes. The episode of Medea being carried away by Jason is told by Hesiod (Th. 992-5) but does not feature in Homer. See also Th. 956-62 for another mention of both Aietes and Medea in Hesiod. This exchange between Homer and Hesiod also reflects the different attributes of King Aietes in their respective poetry: against the Hesiodic διοτρεφέος βασιλῆος (Th. 992) Homer uses ὀλοόφρονος Αἰήταο (Od. 10.137), in line with the negative epithets used in the answer: ἀνέστιον ἦδ' ἀθέμιστον. L reads Κολχίδ' ἔπειθ' ἵκοντο ('when they reached Colchis'), a reading that does not allow the verse to be an ἀμφίβολος γνώμη as there is no apparent difficulty. Wilamowitz interpreted Κολχίδα as the Colchian maid, rather than as Colchis, and then emended the following text in ἔπειτ' ἦγοντο, inspired by the Hesiodic κούρην δ' Αἰήταο... ἦγε παρ' Αἰήτεω (Th. 992-5). The manuscript reading can easily be explained in terms of the double meaning of the form κολχίδα and the similar sound of ἵκοντο and ἦγοντο, each of which suits one of the meanings of κολχίδα. Also Αἰήτην βασιλῆα in the same metrical position is found in the Hesiodic passage (Th. 957). For ἀνέστιον ἦδ' ἀθέμιστον cf. Il. 9.63-4: ἀφρήτωρ ἀθέμιστος ἀνέστιός ἐστιν ἐκεῖνος / ὃς πολέμου ἔραται ἐπιδημίου ὀκρουόεντος, a single but very famous instance, as the many quotations of it show (e.g. Ar. Pax 1097).

131-2. αὐτὰρ ... ἐπὶ νηῶν: the salty water of the sea, οἶμα θαλάσσης, cannot be the object of ἔκπιον. Homer connects it to another verb: they prepared to sail (ποντοπορεῖν ἡμελλον) the water of the sea. Drinking the sea is used in the context of an ἀπορία in another relevant passage, Plu. Dinner of the Seven Sages

153f (see introduction on Plutarch, pp. 18-28). There the Egyptian king Amasis, during an exchange of riddles in a competition in wisdom with the king of the Ethiopians, was asked to drink up the ocean. The first part of the first verse is clearly and extensively based on a Homeric formulaic verse: αὐτὰρ ἐπεὶ σπεῖσάν τε πῖον θ' ὅσον ἤθελε θυμός (e.g. Il. 9.177; Od. 3.342; cf. also Od. 21.273), conveniently modified on the basis of the new context (inclusion of the difficulty at the end and slight variations in the central feet of the hexameter). οἶδμα θαλάσσης is in the Hymn to Demeter 14 in the same metrical position; ἐυσέλμων ἐπὶ νηῶν too is based on Homeric verse-making practice: ἐύσσελμος (the normal epic form) is common epithet for ships and ἐυσσέλμων ἐπὶ νηῶν is found in Od. 8.500 and 24.117. Similar forms (in different cases or with different prepositions, but always in the same metrical position) are also common: cf. e.g. Il. 7.419; Od. 12.358.

133-7. τοῖσιν ... ἴκοισθε: these verses contain two separate but connected sequences of challenges and responses. At 133 Hesiod claims that Agamemnon prayed that the heroes might die. Homer corrects this statement in his line (134) by making Agamemnon pray that the heroes might never die at sea (μηδέ ποτ' ἐν πόντῳ); and with the second part of his verse seems to invite Hesiod to go on with another challenge on the same topic, more specifically he invites him to create an utterance by Agamemnon (καὶ φωνήσας ἔπος ἠΰδα). Hesiod then creates the new challenge in two verses (this time only the second one seems to contain a difficulty): Agamemnon is again said to pray that the Achaeans might never go back to their homeland. In the last verse, thanks to Homer's intervention Agamemnon is said to pray that that Achaeans might never go back harmed, but rather in safety. The text here reflects Agamemnon's problematic standing as a leader in the Iliad. The issue of returning home is dramatised with particular force at the beginning of the poem, through Agamemnon's false dream, and its demoralising consequences; on Agamemnon's leadership see Haubold 2000: 52-68. The suggested division of the verses among the speakers seems to be the one that best suits the structure of the competition as described in this section of the Certamen: both verses which contain difficulties (133 and 136) are attributed to Hesiod, while the solutions belong to Homer (134 and 137). Moreover the number of verses attributed to both speakers is in agreement with the general guidelines given at the beginning of the section: Homer always replies with one verse, while Hesiod sometimes asks the question in two verses. Other solutions have been proposed. Nietzsche suggests attributing to Homer only the last verse. Hermann's proposal (133-4 to Hesiod, 135-7 to Homer) would not involve any solution of difficulty by Homer. Busse's suggestion of dividing line 134 between the two speakers would again go against the set rules. The expression καὶ φωνήσας ἔπος ἦῤῥα is inspired by the Homeric formulaic verse καὶ μιν (or σφεας) φωνήσας ἔπεα πτερόεντα προσηύδα (e.g. Il. 1.201; Od. 1.122; Hymn to Apollo 451). Line 136 is inspired by Od. 19.258: οἴκαδε νοστήσαντα φίλην ἐς πατρίδα γαῖαν (but see also οἴκαδε νοστήσειε at Od. 2.343 and οἴκαδε νοστήσας e.g. Od. 4.103).

138-9. πρὸς πάντα ... Ἡσίοδος: Homer's success continues, and seems to be increasing after each stage of the competition (cf. also the previous descriptions at 90-4 and 102) until he finally receives praise from 'all the Greeks' (176: οἱ μὲν Ἕλληγες πάντες). All this leads the reader to believe that Hesiod is left with no chance of winning.

140-1. τοῦτό ... Ἀχαιοί: Hesiod asks how many Achaeans went to Troy together with the Atreides. Arithmetical riddles in hexameter were common in antiquity: see e.g. the contest between Chalcas and Mopsus (esp. [Hes.] 278 M.-W. and Pherecydes 3 F 142) and the collection of arithmetical riddles in AP 14. The topic of this riddle is touched on by Homer in the Iliad: during the invocation to the Muses that opens the Catalogue of Ships (Il. 2.484-93) he claims that it would not be possible for him to describe or name the whole crowd of the soldiers who went to Troy unless the Muses themselves were to recount all those who went to besiege Troy. Such a task, therefore, would require the assistance of the Muses, and by giving an answer Homer proves that he has the Muses on his side. On the value of this invocation to the Muses for Homeric poetics see most recently Ford 1992: 57-90, Graziosi and Haubold 2010: 1-8, Clay 2011 (esp. ch. 1). Whether or not Homer knew the actual number of Achaeans who participated in the war was also object of debate, and was naturally related to the interpretation of the poet's claim at Il. 2.488-93 (see Schol. bT on Il. 2.488: [...] χρὴ οὖν νομίζειν ὅτι οὐ χαλεπὸν τὸ εἰπεῖν τὸν ἀριθμόν, ἀλλὰ τὸ περὶ ἐκάστου διελθεῖν οὕτως ἀκριβῶς ὥς περὶ τῶν ἡγεμόνων, τίς καὶ πόθεν καὶ τίνων πατέρων καὶ προγόνων, καὶ τὰς πράξεις καὶ τὰ πάθη, ἃ καὶ ὑπὲρ διήγησιν). Such exchange may have been of interest to a fifth-century audience: the size of the Achaean expedition was calculated and discussed by Thucydides, according to whom the Trojan war was not as big as those fought in his own time (Th. 1.10.5: πρὸς τὰς μεγίστας δ' οὖν καὶ ἐλαχίστας ναῦς τὸ μέσον σκοποῦντι οὐ πολλοὶ φαίνονται ἐλθόντες, ὥς ἀπὸ πάσης τῆς Ἑλλάδος κοινῇ πεμπόμενοι). See also Graziosi 2001: 68. The first verse contains a request to speak which draws on the formulaic vocabulary of epic poetry. εἰρομένῳ is found in the expression εἰπέ μοι εἰρομένῳ (but in the first colon of the hexameter) at Od. 15.263 and Od. 24.114. The imperative κατάλεξον is in the same metrical position in a highly formulaic verse with the same introductory function as this (ἀλλ' ἄγε μοι τόδε εἰπὲ καὶ ἀτρεκέως κατάλεξον, e.g. Il. 10.384). It also occurs in Od. 16.235-6, in a similar context: Odysseus is asking Telemachus to count the number of the suitors (ἀλλ' ἄγε μοι μνηστῆρας ἀριθμήσας κατάλεξον / ὄφρ' εἰδέω, ὅσοι τε καὶ οἳ τινες ἀνέρες εἰσὶ). ἄμ' Ἀτρεΐδῃσιν occurs only three times in epic poetry and always in relation to the Achaean expedition: at Il. 2.761-2 the poet asks the Muses to tell him who were the best among the Achaeans who followed the Atreides at Troy (v. 762: οἱ ἄμ' Ἀτρεΐδῃσιν ἔποντο); at Od. 17.103-4 Penelope says that her bed is always wet with her tears since Odysseus went to Troy with the Atreides (...ἐξ οὗ Ὀδυσσεὺς / ὥχεθ' ἄμ' Ἀτρεΐδῃσιν ἐς Ἴλιον); at Od. 19.182-3 Idomeneus is said to have gone to Troy with the Atreides (ἀλλ' ὁ μὲν ἐν νήεσσι κορωνίσιν Ἴλιον εἶσω / ὥχεθ' ἄμ' Ἀτρεΐδῃσιν...). In the two occurrences from the Odyssey the expression ἄμ' Ἀτρεΐδῃσιν is in the same metrical position as in our verse.

142. ὁ δὲ ... οὕτως: the expression ἀποκρίνομαι διὰ λογιστικοῦ προβλήματος does not have parallels in extant Greek literature. Nevertheless its meaning is clear: 'to reply by means of an arithmetical problem' (West).

143-5. πεντήκοντ' ... Ἀχαιοί: Homer calculates in 112,500,000 the number of the Achaeans who took part in the expedition to Troy (50 fire-hearths x 50 spits x 50 pieces of meat x 900 Achaeans; on the recurrence of number fifty in Homer's reply see Unanua Garmendia 2003). The number Homer proposes is striking and 146-8 present an interesting comment in this respect. But the fact itself that Homer gives an answer to this question is sufficient to prove that he is a divinely inspired poet (see 140-1n.). Moreover, the high number Homer proposes seems (playfully) to reassert the greatness of the Achaean expedition in reply to attacks such as that of Thucydides (above) (Graziosi 2001: 68). That this is an important point is also suggested by a comparison with another Iliadic passage, Il. 8.562-3: there the Trojans are counted in a way that is closely similar to Homer's answer (they are gathered in groups of fifty people around a thousand fire-hearths: χίλι' ἄρ' ἐν πεδίῳ πυρὰ καίετο, πὰρ δὲ ἑκάστῳ / εἶατο πεντήκοντα σέλα πυρὸς αἰθομένοιο), and turn out to be considerably fewer than the Achaeans. The practice of counting people by dividing them in groups is common in epic poetry: see e.g. Il. 2.123-8 (another passage about the numerical superiority of the Achaean over the Trojans), as well as the contingents of the Boeotians (Il. 2.509-510) and of Philoctetes (Il. 2.719-720) in the Catalogue of Ships.

146-8. τοῦτο δὲ εὗρίσκεται ... μυριάδες ,ε ἑνῶν: this claim seems incompatible with 149, where it is said that Homer has replied successfully to all the challenges (κατὰ πάντα δὴ τοῦ Ὀμήρου ὑπερτεροῦντος). Hence West 1967: 442 n. 2 (see also West 2003: 335 n. 13) suggests that it is a marginal gloss that has been interpolated in the text in later times. It is an interesting claim nonetheless, because it shows that the topic of the exchange, the number of Achaeans who went to Troy, generated debate and comments throughout antiquity. The manuscript text is incomplete and unclear towards the end. Either the sentence was already incomplete in the source, perhaps because of physical damage (West 1967: 442 n. 2), or the copyist stopped copying the sentence after the letters ,ε ð ñ because of the difficulty of interpreting them. ,ε may well be the symbol for 5,000 (which with δεκαδύο μυριάδες would make 125,000, the expected quantity of pieces of meat) but ð and ñ are more problematic: if they too are numerals (400 and 50 respectively) they give a wrong result. Nietzsche proposes that the symbols ,ε and ð should be read together as εὐ and connected to the next sentence (εὐ κατὰ πάντα δὴ τοῦ Ὀμήρου ὑπερτεροῦντος).

148-75. κατὰ πάντα ... πλεῖστα: Hesiod now moves to asking a series of philosophical questions about morality, religion, government and good citizenship. In some cases the questions touch on topics already presented in previous sections (Wilamowitz 1916b: 403 defines this section as a ‘Dublette’) but there are differences. As West 1967: 442 notes, the verses ‘reek of the late fifth or early fourth century’. In terms of language, the epic formulaic vocabulary is less frequently exploited, and some words are rarely or never used in early epic (see e.g. δικαιοσύνη at 168 and καιρός at 171). The topics discussed in this section informed widely fifth- and fourth-century philosophical and political discourse. Sophistic influences are identifiable throughout the section. More specifically, there are also many connections with Alcidamas’ On Sophists, which explain why these verses might have been relevant to him, or why he might have created them. Furthermore, more explicitly than in the previous sections, Homer masterfully discusses and covers topics that were traditionally considered Hesiod's fields of expertise and sometimes recall specific passages from Works and Days (e.g. justice and the city at 161-3; warning against corruption at 162; wisdom at 170-1; interactions between men at 172-3; see Koning 2010: 161-86). Homer's wisdom seems all-encompassing.

148-50. κατὰ ... πάλιν: once again Homer is said to be able to reply well to every question and Hesiod's disappointment continues. Hesiod this time reacts with φθόνος. The presence of this word recalls Works and Days 24-6 (and may indeed be a pointed reference to that passage), where Hesiod says that the 'good' ἔρις regulates, among other things, the competition between bards: φθόνος is an important component of it (Hes. Op. 25: καὶ πτωχὸς πτωχῷ φθονέει καὶ αἰιδὸς αἰιδῷ). (On this passage see West 1978: 147 and Verdenius 1985: 27). Hesiod therefore seems to be acting in accordance with his own teaching, and is stimulated by the success of his opponent to do better in the competition (Koning 2010: 257-8). However, this mention of φθόνος occurs in a context where the Hesiodic idea of it can easily be misinterpreted: the contrast with Homer's peaceful and nevertheless successful attitude is very clear and can put the Hesiodic φθόνος in a negative light (see also Clay 2003: 179 on Hesiod being a 'bad sport' here). The Certamen seems to be putting in action a perceptive reading of a Hesiodic passage and inviting readers to do the same.

151-4. υἱὲ Μέλητος ... ἀκούσαι: Hesiod asks Homer what is at the same time the best and the worst thing for mortals. The way Hesiod addresses Homer seems to respond to the previous exchange: Homer answered to Hesiod's question about the number of the Achaeans who went to Troy and thereby showed that the Muses are on his side (see 143-5n.). It may therefore be for this reason that Hesiod uses the epithet υἱὲ Μέλητος, that refers to Homer's divine origins (for the river god Meles as Homer's father see 8-9n.) and asks for yet another piece of evidence for the fact that Homer is honoured by the Muses (εἴ περ τιμῶσί σε Μοῦσαι). Hesiod's insistence on this matter may also be due to the fact that he had famously claimed in his works a connection with the Muses for himself, and indeed this was a constant feature in the reception of his persona (Heldmann 1982: 83): this is the first example in this section of Homer taking upon himself some Hesiodic features. The epithet ὑψίστοιο Διὸς μεγάλοιο θύγατρῃς is never attested for the Muses in this form; Διὸς μεγάλοιο θύγατρῃς is also, in the same metrical position, in Antimachus fr. 1 Wyss; Διὸς μεγάλοιο is in the same metrical position at Od. 11.268 (Διὸς μεγάλοιο μιγεῖσα). Zeus in early hexameter poetry is never called ὑψίστος, but he is in later sources: Pind. Nem. 1.60; Aesch. Eum. 28. The core of Hesiod's question is contained in the last two verses of his utterance. This recalls the first two exchanges, about the best and finest things for men (75-9 and 81-9), but with a Sophistic twist: the practice of making opposite speeches on the same topic is Sophistic, and the contents of both answer and question seem to refer to specific philosophical doctrines (see below).

μέτρον: the interpretation of this question depends on the solution of a textual problem concerning this word. The manuscript reads μέτρον but the emendation μέτρον, first proposed by Barnes and followed by Wilamowitz and West, seems necessary. Editors and translators have given two different meanings to the word μέτρον depending on whether they accepted the transmitted accusative or the emendation in dative: 'standard' for those who have kept the accusative, (Evelyn-White translates 'tell me a standard that is both best and worst'; Avezzù: 'dimmi una misura che sia la migliore e la peggiore insieme'); 'meter' (hexameter) for those who have emended in dative (West: 'say – fitting into meter – what is for mortal the finest and the worst'; De Martino 1984: 'dimmi, nel metro adatto, qual è per i mortali la cosa più bella e più odiosa'). The form μέτρον solves grammatical inconsistencies in the text and gives the most appropriate meaning for the word μέτρον in this context. The accusative of the manuscript reading does not suit the verb ἐναρμόζων (which is itself a necessary and unanimously accepted emendation of the transmitted ἐναρμόζον): ‘to adapt a standard’, or even ‘to adapt a meter’, would not make sense in this context. Those who keep the accusative and give to μέτρον the meaning of ‘standard’ in fact do not translate ἐναρμόζων. With the emendation in dative and the meaning ‘meter’ the sentence would mean ‘fitting into meter’: ἐναρμόζων is given a role in the sentence and the question assumes an additional nuance: this request to fit the contents of the answer into meter may be seen as an allusion to the fact that the issues touched on in it are typical also of some Sophistic literary production in prose (cf. also Gorgias, Hel. 9: τὴν ποίησιν ἅπασαν καὶ νομίζω καὶ ὀνομάζω λόγον ἔχοντα μέτρον). Homer in his answer uses μέτρον as ‘standard’ but this does not mean that the word must have the same meaning in the question as well: there may be an intentional play on these several meanings of the word of the same type as in Critias 4 IEG (ll. 3-4): οὐ γάρ πως ἦν τοῦνομ’ ἐφαρμόζειν ἐλεγείῳ, / νῦν δ’ ἐν ἱαμβείῳ κείσεται οὐκ ἀμέτρως. Note the presence of ἐφαρμόζειν, which parallels the Certamen’s ἐναρμόζων. On the use of μέτρον in this passage by Critias see Ford 2002: 43.

156-60: Ἡσίοδ’ ἔκγονε Δίου ... ἐρώτα: the expression Ἡσίοδ’ ἔκγονε Δίου parallels and at the same time contrasts the epithet used for Homer in the question (υἱὲ Μέλητος at 151): while Homer’s father is a river god, Hesiod’s father Dius is never said to be more than a common mortal in the extant sources (Koning 2010: 133, Kivilo 2010: 8). The next words of Homer’s answer make the contrast between the two poets even sharper: to Hesiod’s φθόνος (148-50), Homer responds by replying willingly (ἐκόντα) and gladly (πρόφρων). For πρόφρων in epic cf. e.g. Hymn. Merc. 561: προφρονέως ἐθέλουσιν ἀληθείην ἀγορεύειν. The core of Homer’s answer is that the best and at the same time the worst thing for mortals is to be a measure for oneself: to be so of good is the best thing, to be so of evil is the worst. See also West’s translation: ‘the finest thing is to be a measure of good for oneself, and the worst of all, to be so of evil’. The word μέτρον may be a reference to the Protagorean doctrine of the ἄνθρωπος μέτρον (fr. 1 D.-K.: πάντων χρημάτων μέτρον ἐστὶν ἄνθρωπος, τῶν μὲν ὄντων ὡς ἔστιν, τῶν δὲ οὐκ ὄντων ὡς οὐκ ἔστιν), to which sometimes Homer was connected in antiquity: Pl. Tht. 160d. But Homer claims that being a standard for oneself is also the worst of things for mortals, thus firmly taking distance from such Sophistic doctrines. For another possible reaction by Homer to Protagorean attacks see 113-14n.

ἄλλο δὲ πᾶν ὃ τι σῶ θυμῷ φίλον ἐστὶν ἐρώτα: Homer is inviting here Hesiod to ask another question in the same way in which rhetoricians and Sophists like Alcidamas and Gorgias invited the public to put forth a topic on which they would test their improvisation skills (Vogt 1959: 198 for references). ὃ τι σῶ θυμῷ φίλον ἐστὶν: cf. the formulaic φίλον ἔπλετο θυμῷ (e.g. Il. 7.31).

161-3. πῶς ἂν ... ἐπείη: Hesiod asks now what the best way to run a πόλις is. This is another central issue in Hesiodic poetry, and a topic of great interest to the Sophists too. Homer manages to reply in a very Hesiodic fashion. The warning to avoid immoral and illegal profit is typical of Hesiod and informs Hesiod's addresses to Perses and the kings: e.g. Op. 352: μὴ κακὰ κερδαίνειν: κακὰ κέρδεα ἴσ' ἀάτησιν. For the necessity of punishment of unjust behaviour see Hes. fr. 286: Justice is done (δίκη κ' ἰθεῖα γένοιτο) if a wrongdoer suffers the same injustice he brought about. Also in this case we can see a contrast to certain Sophistic doctrines according to which 'justice is nothing other than the advantage of the stronger' (Thrasymachus fr. 56 D.-K.).

164-5. εὖχεσθαι ... ἅπαντα: Hesiod asks what the best thing to pray the gods for is. Although the text of the answer is metrically incomplete and it has been suggested that it is corrupt, it seems to mean that the best thing men should pray the gods for is that they allow humans to be always well-disposed toward themselves. Cf. Evelyn-White's translation: 'that he (a man) always be at peace with himself'); according to another interpretation, that the gods themselves be well-disposed toward men (West: 'that they (the gods) be well-disposed to the city evermore'). Homer therefore agrees with the traditional Greek views on religion, according to which gods should be objects of prayers and honours, and in saying so he appears to be taking distance from Sophistic opinions on the divine intervention on human affairs. According to Protagoras, humans cannot know anything about the gods and therefore interaction is impossible (fr. 4 D.-K.: 'περὶ μὲν θεῶν οὐκ ἔχω εἰδέναι'). Thrasymachus claims that gods do not care about human affairs, which makes prayers ineffective (fr. 8 D.-K. 'οἱ θεοὶ οὐχ ὀρῶσι τὰ ἀνθρώπινα').

<ἀει>: the addition by Stephanus allows the hexameter to scan correctly and does not involve substantial modifications of the manuscript text.

166-7. ἐν δ' ἐλαχίστῳ ... ἀνδρῶν: the contents of both question and answer are very similar to a dictum attributed to Periander by Stobaeus (3.3.45): Περίανδρος ἐρωτηθεὶς, τί μέγιστον ἐν ἐλαχίστῳ, εἶπε 'φρένες ἀγαθαὶ ἐν σώματι ἀνθρώπου'. Again Homer is connected to traditional Greek morality. The awareness that the bodies of men are 'the smallest thing' evokes the brevity of human life and the suffering it involves, topics that Homer mentions at several points, with the consequent exhortation to enjoy life (cf. above, 75-9 and 81-9, and below, 174-5). By contrast to the human body, φρένες ἐσθλαί are presented as the typically and exclusively human compensation for the unpleasant mortal condition. In fact all the advice Homer gives in this section aims ultimately at allowing humans the best possible time on earth. As O' Sullivan 1992: 87 notes, ἐν δ' ἐλαχίστῳ may also refer directly to εἰπεῖν, rather than to φύετα: the question would thus mean 'what is the best thing you can say in the shortest time?'. This interpretation discloses a reference to the issue of the length of speeches, relevant to Gorgias and to his pupil Alcidas: already Nietzsche 1873: 540 related this verse to Pl. Grg. 449 as evidence for Alcidas' influence on the Certamen; O' Sullivan goes as far as to see in these verses a hint at the polemic between Alcidas and Isocrates on this point, which they both inherit from Gorgias as a concern. Alcidas proclaimed the importance of regulating the length of a speech depending on the audience's needs and level of attention, and claimed that this could be achieved only by those who perform improvised – rather than written – speeches: On Sophists 22-3.

168-9. ἡ δὲ δικαιοσύνη ... πορίζειν: according to Homer righteousness and manliness are to be used to serve the common good. Even though the two virtues mentioned in the questions are relevant to both Homer's and Hesiod's works, the answer seems to fit Hesiod better. The role of justice in the government of a city is prominent in Works and Days: in the Iron Age, the fact that men are χειροδίκαι (Op. 189), that is, 'justice is decided by main force' (West 1978: 202) results in a lack of mutual help and assistance and to the ruin of cities; conversely, the just cities and their people will blossom (Op. 225-7). The word δικαιοσύνη is never used by Homer and Hesiod: it is first attested in Theognis 1. 147 (144-8: Βούλεο δ' εὐσεβέων ὀλίγοις σὺν χρήμασιν οἰκεῖν / ἢ πλουτεῖν ἀδίκως χρήματα πασάμενος. ἐν δὲ δικαιοσύνῃ συλλήβδην πᾶσ' ἀρετὴ 'στι, / πᾶς δέ τ' ἀνὴρ ἀγαθός, Κύρνε, δίκαιος ἐών); but it seems, from its first appearance, to be strongly linked with a very Hesiodic concept (expressed e.g. in Op. 40-1; on this parallel see also Jellamo 2005: 79).

170-1. τῆς σοφίης ... ἔπεσθαι: the next question is about wisdom, which Homer defines as 'judging situations correctly and seizing the moment'. In this answer Homer deals with two other very Hesiodic topics: both concepts of σοφία and καιρός are in antiquity closely associated with Hesiod. For Hesiod as the wise poet see Koning 2010: 161-5: σοφός seems to be Hesiod's epithetus ornans as much as θεῖος is Homer's, and even though Homer is often said to be wise, this epithet seems to be more closely connected to Hesiod; his σοφία is for example mentioned in both his funeral epigrams (AP 7.54; EG 428), one of which is also transmitted in the Certamen (250-3). As for the καιρός, O'Sullivan 1992: 92 notes that Homer does not use this word in his poems (although he uses the adjective καίριος). Hesiod, by contrast, uses it in an often quoted passage from Works and Days: μέτρα φυλάσσεσθαι· καιρὸς δ' ἐπὶ πᾶσιν ἄριστος (Op. 694: quoted e.g. by Thgn. 401). It is noteworthy that in this section of the contest Homer becomes the poet of σοφία and καιρός. The notion of καίρως is also important to Alcidamas, and these verses have often been taken as evidence for his influence on the Certamen (Vogt 1959: 215, O' Sullivan loc. cit.). In Alcidamas' On Sophists καίρως is connected to the ability of improvising speeches; importantly, the occurrences of this word in that work show that the concept as expressed by Alcidamas fits the image of Homer built throughout the contest, as well as in this specific section: seizing the right moment is not for everyone but only for gifted people, who are therefore admired as if they were divine (e.g. Soph. 3 and 9). On the contrary, according to Alcidamas, performers of written speeches are not able to seize the moment (e.g. Soph. 10 and 28).

172-3. πιστεῦσαι ... ἔπηται: Hesiod's question deals with trust: when do men deserve to be trusted? Homer replies that it is worth trusting men only when they run the same risks as you. The concept of πίστις does not seem to be Homeric and it is indeed first attested in Hesiod (Op. 372, see below). Moreover, Hesiod's advice on interactions between people was seen as authoritative in antiquity (Koning 2010: 177-83). The way in which Homer formulates his answer here suggests that he is championing another Hesiodic idea, cf. Op. 370-2: μισθὸς δ' ἀνδρὶ φίλῳ εἰρημένος ἄρκιος ἔστω· / καὶ τε κασιγνήτῳ γελάσας ἐπὶ μάρτυρα θέσθαι· / πίστεις δ' ἄρ' ὁμῶς καὶ ἀπιστίαι ὤλεσαν ἄνδρας. Koning 2010: 148 also points out that the Hesiodic passage is one of those that 'seem to invite treatment by successors' (e.g. Thgn. 1.831-2) because of what he calls the catch-word factor: it is therefore plausible that the Certamen, in its attempt to show how 'Hesiodic' Homer could be, refers to this passage from Works and Days.

174-5. ἡ δ' εὐδαιμονίη ... πλεῖστα: Homer is now asked to define happiness for men, and this is another concept that is dealt with in Hesiodic, rather than Homeric, poetry. While in Homeric poetry the word εὐδαιμονίη is attested only once in the Homeric Hymn to Athena (v. 5: Χαῖρε θεά, δὸς δ' ἄμμι τύχην εὐδαιμονίην τε) and never in the Iliad or the Odyssey, the definition of the εὐδαίμων man closes Hesiod's Works and Days and sums up Hesiod's teaching:

the εὐδαίμων man is the one who works without offending the gods, understands the omens of birds and avoids transgression. Op. 826-8: τάων εὐδαίμων τε καὶ ὄλβιος ὃς τάδε πάντα / εἰδὼς ἐργάζεται ἀναίτιος ἀθανάτοισιν, / ὄρνιθας κρίνων καὶ ὑπερβασίας ἀλεείνων. The definition that Homer gives is in line with what Homer had said in the first two exchanges of verses: in spite of the unavoidability of pain and death, inherent in their condition as mortal, men are encouraged to enjoy life as they can. The reaction of the public is, in both cases, positive.

176-9. ῥηθέντων δὲ καὶ τούτων ... εἰπεῖν: king Panoides has been mentioned so far only once at the beginning of the contest (cf. 69), but now makes a new and unexpected appearance in the text. Although the public confirm their preference for Homer, he imposes a new test on the two poets: a performance of what they consider the finest passage from their own poems. It is only now that the competition appears explicitly to assess Homer's and Hesiod's poetry. For Panoides' verdict see 205-10n.

180-204. Hesiod's finest piece is Works and Days 383-92, the opening of the farmer's calendar; Homer describes a battle scene by stitching together two passages from Iliad 13 (vv. 126-33 and 339-44). The ultimate effect of this selection is to show that Homer's poetry allows humans to share the gaze of the gods on the world, thus allowing them to go beyond their mortal nature, while Hesiod's poetry, with the description of the cycle of nature and agriculture activities, does not offer anything that a man cannot experience in his everyday life. This is achieved by setting up and developing contrasts between the poetry of peace and that of war, of which Works and Days and Iliad were traditionally taken as representative already by the time of Aristophanes (R. 1033-6). On this traditional opposition see Graziosi 2002: 168-84 and Koning 2010: 269-84. The two selected passages describe well the contrast as they respond to each other in a number of details, presented in one context as symbols of peace, and of war in the other (see also Hunter 2009: 264 and Koning 2010: 253). Both passages start by presenting an image of non-human entities and then zoom in to focus on men: Hesiod mentions the constellation of the Pleiades that regulates the productive cycle of agriculture (180), while Homer mentions the gods Ares and Athena rejoicing in the spectacle of the battle (191-3); the Hesiodic man works in order to ensure a means of life for himself, while the Homeric fighters strive in the 'battle that destroys the mortals' (199: μάχη φθισίμβροτος). Iron is sharpened in the Hesiodic passage to reap (184), and interestingly a scholium to this line of Works and Days feels the need to specify that the iron in question is indeed that used for reaping, almost in an attempt to avoid any possible disturbance to the peacefulness of this description. Indeed, metal is also an instrument of death, as the Homeric ταμείχρως at 200 shows. The Hesiodic man is emphatically and repeatedly said to be naked, while the Homeric heroes are covered by their armour. Then, the metaphor in the Homeric passage, 'the fight bristled' (like a corn field) at 199, responds to the literal reaping in Hesiod. The choice of a passage from Works and Days for Hesiod is an obvious one, because of the mention of his programmatic trip to Chalcis and victory at 650-9. (For the suggestion that Hesiod at Chalcis may have performed the Theogony see West 1966: 44). More specifically, Works and Days 383-92 'underlines like no other Hesiod's image of the peace-loving farmer poet' (Koning 2010: 252), thus proving an appropriate selection to represent poetry of peace. This may also explain why Hesiod's performance in the Certamen stops right before the reference to the poet's quarrel with his 'foolish' brother Perses, that follows these peaceful lines in their original context in Works and Days: for the suggestion, made on the basis of Philostratus' passage (see Introduction, pp. 31-5), that those lines may have been included in an 'original' version of the contest see West 1967: 442 n. 3. The Pleiades in Works and Days are also said to regulate the right time of seafaring, as well as agricultural activities (see Op. 615 and 619): the choice of a passage mentioning the Pleiades may work as a cross reference to the Nautilia section, where Hesiod's programmatic mention of the contest belongs. Ancient sources underlined the ethical value of these verses, which makes them compatible with Panoides' verdict: according to him it was just (208: δίκαιον) for Hesiod to win as he sang peace and agriculture; according to the scholium to Works and Days 381-2, these verses encourage agricultural work and the just (δίκαιον) income that comes from it. Homer stitches together two sequences of verses from book 13 of the Iliad, where they are separated by some 200 lines. This particular scene of war, may suit a fifth-century Athenian audience interested in seeing in Homer the poet of communal fighting (Graziosi 2002: 180); the selection as it stands also seems to have been purposefully made to provide the reader with a means of exploring the relationship between the Muses, the poet and audience: Homer turns out to be an inspired intermediary between the Muses and the audience, and therefore shares and allows the audience to share his divine gaze on something that their human nature would not choose to bear in reality, the sight of war and death. Homer's passage presents a close comparison between divine and human perspectives on war: the gods enjoy the sight of that battle (192-3), but a human internal spectator cannot do so (203-4), because for him war means death. Homer's poetry however allows mortals to face the spectacle of war in safety (Hunter 2009: 265) – that is, from a divine perspective. The claim that the audience in the Certamen, as external spectators, define these verses as 'transcending the merely fitting' (206) may be read in this sense. By putting at the centre of Homeric poetry its ability to allow humans to share a divine perspective on the world, the Certamen gives a perceptive reading of the Homeric epics. The same reaction to the sight of war by gods is found also, for example, at Il. 17.398, and, at Iliad 4.539-44, an internal spectator is said to enjoy the sight of war, but only because Athena takes him by the hand and protects him. Eustathius (506.6-8), commenting on this passage, interestingly remarks that this man watching safely the battle scene can be identified with the public who listens to the poet's performance. Another detail in this passage hints at the possibility of seeing beyond what human nature allows seeing: at 200-3 it is said that eyes were dazzled with the glint of bronze from the shining helmets, and the bright shields: a human being, therefore, cannot see the spectacle. The sight of it for a man means becoming blind, and the same goes for Homer too: one of his biographies (Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.5) claims that Homer was blinded by the dazzle of the armour after praying that he might behold the hero as he was when he went out to join the battle arrayed in his replacement, but Thetis and the Muses took pity of him and honoured with the gift of poetry. And this is how we have the description of Achilles' armour in book 19, that allows us too to see it without getting blinded, and this is also how we are allowed to see the battle in book 13. The parallel with the story of Demodocus' blindness in Od. 8.63-4 is obvious: it seems therefore, that the Certamen offers a perceptive reading of the epics which is tune with biographical representations of Homer.

181. ἀμήτου is the necessary emendation for the unmetrical form transmitted by L ἀμητοῖο. The form ἀμητοῖο is also present in some Hesiodic manuscripts.

183. αὐθις is the reading of L, emended on the basis of the passage in Hesiod. But the manuscript reading seems unproblematic and is transmitted by part of the Hesiodic manuscripts too.

189. ὅτ' ἂν ὥρια πάντα πέλωνται: these words (the second part of 189) differ substantially from the corresponding section of the verse as we find it in Hesiod's work (Op. 392): εἴ χ' ὥρια πάντ' ἐθέλησθα ('if in good season you want all –'). The Hesiodic text continues for a few more lines before it reaches the first possible syntactical stop at the end of verse: εἴ χ' ὥρια πάντ' ἐθέλησθα / ἔργα κομίζεσθαι Δημήτερος, ὥς τοι ἕκαστα / ὥρι' ἀέξεται, μή πως τὰ μέταξε χατίζων / πτώσεως ἀλλοτρίους οἴκους καὶ μηδὲν ἀνύσσεις. The variant in the Certamen is attested nowhere else. It may be an ad hoc re-elaboration of this Hesiodic verse in order to make the passage shorter and therefore suitable for the Certamen. Be it as it may, the verse as it is in the Certamen sums up the contents of a part of the following lines (εἴ χ' ὥρια ... ἀέξεται) while leaving out the mention of the beggar.

196. The reading of L ἀσπὶς δ' ἄρ', which does not work metrically, can be emended to ἀσπὶς ἄρ' on the basis of the reading of the Homeric manuscripts.

205-10. θαυμάσαντες ... διεξιόντα: the public reacts with θαῦμα at Homer's performance (see also 90-1n.), because the verses 'transcend the merely fitting'. As suggested above (180-204n.) this is because Homer, unlike Hesiod, appears as an inspired poet who allows men to share the gaze of the gods on the world. Panoides, however, prefers Hesiod's performance on the basis of its greater ethical value. The Certamen does not express any explicit opinion on this verdict, but many clues suggest a disagreement with it. First of all, the whole episode is 'constructed in terms that are carefully taken over from the Iliad's portrayal of consensus and its discontents': it recalls the opening assembly of the Iliad, an 'example of injustice but also as violation of social norms' where the king, Agamemnon, 'defies collective will in favour of his own inclination' (Elmer 2013: 220). Furthermore, Panoides' judgement seems partial: it takes into account only the last test, and is issued by one single person, even though other judges were said to be present and the public constantly expressed their opinion. Moreover, Panoides judges the poets only on the basis of the contents of their works and not for their poetic skills. The very introduction of the figure of Panoides contributes to cast doubts on the verdict. When an ancient author wants to show agreement with Hesiod's victory he does not introduce Panoides in his narrative, but rather attributes the verdict to the whole public: see Introduction on Themistius, pp. 38-41. On the other hand, when mentioned, Panoides is never presented as a competent judge. Furthermore, as portrayed in the Certamen, the victory of Hesiod is not the central point of the story. Indeed it is anticipated already in the introduction to the competition, where the focus is rather on the fact that both poets competed admirably and on the way the competition developed until Hesiod eventually won (70-1). Likewise, the final verdict and the celebration of Hesiod's victory occupy relatively little space, and φασί at 210 seems to indicate some distance on the part of the author of our text. Consequently, the arguments of those scholars who see Panoides' judgement as fair seem problematic. Koning 2010: 255 claims that 'there is no explicit indication that Panedes' judgement is a bad one: neither the author, nor Homer or the public comments on it. Sophia is in the end defined as knowing what is beneficial to the polis, a type of wisdom with which Hesiod was traditionally associated, and his victory thus remain unchallenged'. This interpretation does not account for Homer's ability to show what is beneficial to the polis, masterfully expressed by the poet in the exchanges at 149-75. Koning also adds that it is not surprising that the king, whose brother has just been killed in war, should make such a decision; or perhaps the newly appointed king uses the contest to announce a change of politics. The second option seems reasonable, though again it would imply that his judgement is concerned not with poetics, but merely with the contents of poetry: it still appears as partial. As for the first hypothesis, it should not be forgotten that only Plutarch mentions that Amphidamas died in a battle, while the Certamen does not: it seems unwise to integrate so straightforwardly one text with the other, especially as they differ in the presentation of so many aspects of the story. West 1967: 443 claims that 'there is not a word to suggest that the decision was unjust', and that 'the story belongs to a type much favoured by the Greeks, in which a man does the opposite of what is expected, and justifies himself with an original and by no means contemptible analysis of the situation'. West adds that Alcidamas, who according to him was the inventor of the contest story, agreed with the fact that Hesiod, as the poet of peace, deserved to win. But every attempt to interpret the final verdict in the Certamen on the basis of its alleged presentation in Alcidamas is speculation, as it is impossible to know how faithful the author of the Certamen was to his source, and how and to what extent he modified his source's words. Moreover, some scholars who have attempted to interpret the verdict on the basis of what it may have meant in Alcidamas reached quite opposite conclusions: Vogt 1959, for example, sees Homer in the Certamen as the champion of the improvised speeches, who certainly deserved the victory in the contest. He claims that Alcidamas could not, therefore, agree with Panoides and that the king's judgement in the Certamen is presented as biased. O' Sullivan 1992: 98, in turn, concludes that Alcidamas did not attach any importance to the mere fact of Hesiod's victory, but rather to the manner of it.

210-12. τῆς μὲν οὖν νίκης ... ἐπιγράψαντα: the prize for the competition is a tripod, which Hesiod dedicates to the Muses: these details of the story are inspired by Op. 657-8. The tripod and the epigram inscribed on it (see 213-14n.) feature in many literary accounts of the contest, but the story also had a material reception: a tripod bearing the epigram of Hesiod's victory was displayed in antiquity in the place where Hesiod himself (Op. 657-8) claimed to have dedicated it, on Mt Helicon, and it was visible in Pausanias' times (Paus. 9.31.3); see Introduction on Hesiod, esp. pp. 12-14. A tripod was the usual prize at games in Homeric poetry (e.g. Il. 11.700, 22.164, 23.259) and in historical times. A famous extant tripod, a prize at a musical contest, is GDI 5786 (fifth c. BC, from Dodona).

213-14. Ἡσίοδος ... Ὅμηρον: the epigram is transmitted in several accounts of the contest, but it also had independent circulation in anthologies of epigrams and school books (see apparatus; see also pp. 83-6 on P.Freib. 1.1b). The second verse of this epigram is attested in the scholia to Works and Days 657 as a variant for the Hesiodic verse. This may be a genuine variant, rather than a simple interpolation from the text of the epigram, and shows that the interaction and the relationship between the Hesiodic passage on the tradition of the contest are very strong (see Introduction on Hesiod, esp. pp. 12-14).

215-23. τοῦ δὲ ... ἐστίν: after winning the contest Hesiod consults the Delphic oracle, which predicts to him the place of his death. Homer too consulted the oracle and was warned against going to Ios; thus the text is building an elaborate narrative which connects oracles, contest and deaths of the poets: see 56-62n. The legend of the death of Hesiod following the misinterpretation of an oracle was circulating already in the fifth century BC. The oldest attested witness of it is Thucydides, who however does not report the verses given by the oracle (Th. 3.96.1: ἀυλίσάμενος δὲ τῷ στρατῷ ἐν τοῦ Διὸς τοῦ Νεμείου τῷ ἱερῷ, ἐν ᾧ Ἡσίοδος ὁ ποιητὴς λέγεται ὑπὸ τῶν ταύτῃ ἀποθανεῖν, χρησθὲν αὐτῷ ἐν Νεμέᾳ τοῦτο παθεῖν). The misunderstanding of an oracle predicting the place of one's death is a common pattern of many ancient biographies: for a list see Fontenrose 1978: 59-60.

219-23. Ὀλβιος ... ἐστίν: the text of this oracle is transmitted only by the Certamen and Tzetzes (Life of Hesiod 166-70 Colonna). Although the story of this oracle was known already in the fifth century BC (Th. 3.96.1, quoted above at 215-23n.), it is not possible to know whether the lines were in circulation in this form already by that time. According to Fontenrose 1978: 371 these verses are a fifth-century production manufactured ad hoc for the legend. The greeting by which the oracle starts is common in oracular epigrams, see e.g. AP 14.77: Ὀλβιος οὗτος ἀνὴρ, ὃς νῦν κατὰ λάινον οὐδὸν etc. (Fontenrose 1978: 171-2); and the oracle received by Kypselos: Ὀλβιος οὗτος ἀνὴρ ὃς ἐμὸν δόμον ἐσκαταβαίνει etc. (Hdt. 5.92 = Q61 Fontenrose, with commentary); D. Chr. 37.5.5: Ὀλβιος οὗτος ἀνὴρ ὃς ἐμὸν δόμον εἰσαφικάνει. The second verse of the oracle is Homeric: it is transmitted in the very same form at Il. 7.451 (τοῦ δ' ἦτοι κλέος ἔσται ὅσον τ' ἐπικίδναται ἠώς) and a few verses later (Il. 7.458) with a slight variation at the beginning (σὸν δ' ἦτοι κλέος etc.).

221. ὄσην: this is the reading of the manuscript L, emended in ὅσον on the basis of the Iliadic verse. But the emendation is unnecessary, as the Iliadic manuscripts give support to both readings. The scholia also show that ὄσην was the reading preferred by one of the major ancient editors of Homer, Aristarchus.

224-53. ὁ δὲ Ἡσίοδος ... ἐν βασάνῳ σοφίης: the text devotes relatively little space to the events of Hesiod's life after the contest and, unlike Homer's case, there is no mention of the poet's artistic production or his travels. The text thus gives the impression that Hesiod's 'dreary end is vengeance for his unfair victory, as Hesiod's death occurs after, and as a consequence of, his sensational success' (Debiasi 2012: 482). The text offers two different accounts of the story of Hesiod's death, one by Alcidas and one by Eratosthenes. In both cases the title of the work used as sources is cited with the name of the author, but in the case of Eratosthenes the manuscript gives a problematic reading (see 241n.). The main differences between the two versions of the story concern the location of the murder (Eastern Locris in Alcidas, 226n.; not specified in Eratosthenes), the identity of Hesiod's murderers and their destiny (see 226-7n. and 241n.), and whether or not Hesiod was actually guilty of the crime of which he was charged (230-2n.). In general, Eratosthenes' version appears more positive in its depiction of Hesiod, as the poet is clearly said to be innocent (245-7n.), and more rationalising, because of the exclusion of Zeus' intervention and of the miraculous rescue of Hesiod's body by dolphins. Hesiod's death was told in many other sources and always with different details. This diversity was acknowledged already in antiquity (Paus. 9.31.6). Collection of testimonia: T30-T34 Most 2006; discussions: Friedel 1878-1879, Kivilo 2010: 25-36, Koning 2010: 134-8.

226. εἰς δὲ Οἰνόην τῆς Λοκρίδος: Oinoe is the name of various places (LSJ s.v. Οἰνόη). The form Οἰνόη seems to be a later form for Οἰνεών testified at Th. 3.95.3. (Cf. also St. Byz. s.v. Οἰνεών). The city where the death of Hesiod was located by most of the ancient sources was in Olozean (Western) Locris and close to Naupactus, although the precise site of it is not identifiable with certainty (Lefkowitz 1981: 3 n. 4; Kivilo 2010: 26 n. 81). The earliest witness of the episode of Hesiod's death, Thucydides, locates the episode in the Ozolean Locris too: cf. Th. 3.95.3, the passage immediately before the mention of Hesiod's death: ὥρμητο δὲ ἐξ Οἰνεῶνος τῆς Λοκρίδος. οἱ δὲ Ὀζόλαι οὗτοι Λοκροὶ ξύμμαχοι ἦσαν. Pausanias (9.31.6) connects it to Ozolean Locris as well: he says that the murderers fled from Naupactus (in the Ozolean Locris), to Molycria, in the opposite coast, and also claims that this is one of the few details of the episode on which everybody agrees. Plutarch mentions that Hesiod's corpse was brought to Rhium in Molycreia (Dinner of the Seven Sages 162d and The Cleverness of Animals 984d) and that the murderers were the sons of Ganyctor of Naupactus (The Cleverness of Animals 969d-e). However, the mention of 'the sea between Euboea and Locris' shows that Alcidas locates the episode of Hesiod's death in the Opuntian (Eastern) Locris rather than in the Ozolean (Western) Locris. Against West 2003: 343 n. 15, who thinks of a mistake by Alcidas, Nagy 2009: 306 suggests that different locations may respond two different claims about the poet. This detail in particular may originate from the version of the myth promoted by the people of Orchomenos. Moreover, to solve this inconsistency it is necessary to emend two readings of the manuscript that however are not problematic: τῆς Εὐβοίας καὶ τῆς Λοκρίδος (231-2) and Ἀγιάδνεϊας (234).

226-7. παρ' Ἀμφιφάνει καὶ Γανύκτορι, τοῖς Φηγέως παισίν: according to Alcidas, Hesiod's murderers are Amphiphanes and Ganyctor the sons of Phegeus. This is only one of the couples to whom the tradition attributes the crime, and it is found also in Aristotle (fr. 565 Rose) and Tzetzes (Life of Hesiod 171-2 Colonna); for the other couple see 241n. It is difficult to see the reasons of these differences in the names of the killers, but it is certainly striking that Alcidas chooses the option according to which one of the murderers has the same name as the son of Amphidamas who organised the funeral games where the contest took place (63). In fact, Alcidas is the oldest testimony to this identity of the murders and he may have even created this particular detail as a sort of reversal of Hesiod's undeserved victory at the contest. Debiasi 2012: 476 notes that the onomastics of the killers point to Euboea, the site of the controversial contest: this confirms, first of all, that the location of the episode for Alcidas was Eastern Locris, and secondly suggests again a connection of the poet's death with the contest episode. Phegeus, as the father of Amphiphanes and Ganyctor, is mentioned only in the context of Hesiod's death.

230. †Οἰνῶσιν†: the reading of the manuscript is not attested anywhere else. Stephanus of Byzantium (s.v. Οἰνεών) gives for Oinoe the ethnic adjective Οἰνεωνεύς, which however looks incompatible with the manuscript reading. Other attested forms are Οἰνοαῖος (St. Byz.) and Οἰναῖος (IG 22.99, 1623.5, 1926.130), but it is uncertain whether they refer to our city or not. A locative Οἰνόησι is attested (IG 12.845.5) and the reading of the manuscript looks like a contracted form of it. But there seems to be no definitive solution to this textual problem. P.Ath.Soc.Pap. inv. M2 (l. 5) cannot help here because of its poor condition.

230-2. ὑπονοήσαντες ... κατεπόντισαν: the episode of Hesiod's death seems 'sordid' to many readers (Scodel 1980: 304, O' Sullivan 1992: 98, Rosen 2004: 303). Koning instead finds in this episode one of the signs of Hesiod's heroic status, as heroes 'often suffer from an abnormally great sexual appetite' (Koning 2010: 135), but the image of the poet that emerges from this account is far from positive, especially when compared to Eratosthenes' version in which Hesiod's innocence is pointedly asserted. More details on the identity of the girl seduced by Hesiod and her offspring are given by Tzetzes (Life of Hesiod 154-5 Colonna), who informs us that the son of Hesiod and the girl he raped, called Ctimene, was Stesichorus. Other sources give different details about the girl and the child, but do not connect them explicitly to the episode of the rape (sources listed in Kivilo 2010: 10-11). There is also mention of a son in Hesiod's own Works and Days, and this may have been connected to this story in antiquity and fostered its development: Op. 270-1: νῦν δὲ ἐγὼ μήτ' αὐτὸς ἐν ἀνθρώποισι δίκαιος / εἶην μήτ' ἐμὸς υἱός...

231-2. τῆς Εὐβοίας καὶ τῆς Λοκρίδος: this reading locates the story in Eastern Locris. See also 226n. The emendations proposed for these lines are all meant to relocate the episode in Western Locris, by substituting the name of Euboea with places in the coast opposite Western Locris, namely Molycria and Achaia (Goettling and Westermann), or substituting both names altogether (Nietzsche). P.Ath.Soc.Pap. inv. M2 offers an indisputable solution to this problem: the word Εὐβοίας visible at l. 9 proves that the story could be located in Eastern Locris and that there is no need for an emendation (Mandilaras 1990: 61).

232-4. τοῦ δὲ νεκροῦ ... ὑπὸ δελφίνων προσενεχθέντος: the rescue of Hesiod's corpse by dolphins closely parallels an episode told in myths about the lives of other cult heroes (Nagy 2009: 306) and in fact it is the 'most strongly heroic trait of Hesiod's vita' (Koning 2010: 135). Similar episodes are present in the biographies of many characters who enjoyed heroic status in antiquity: among the singers, Coeranus from Miletus (Ath. 13.606e) and most famously Arion (first attested in Hdt. 1.23). The choice of the dolphins for this role must be due to the particular consideration they enjoyed in antiquity (partly no doubt as a response to the fact that these animals do sometimes rescue other mammals from drowning) and to wide-spread beliefs concerning their pleasure in music. Furthermore, these animals were sacred to different gods: Poseidon, Aphrodite, Apollo and Dionysus (Apollo and Dionysos being especially relevant in the case of singers and poets). See for references BNP s.v. Dolphin. The intervention of the dolphins may be seen therefore as a sign of divine support: after they miraculously rescue Hesiod's body, Zeus punishes the murders and throws them into the sea. This episode may also be related to the legend of the second birth and youth of Hesiod (see 247-53n.). It may be a 'mythical expression of the poet's death and rebirth' (Koning 2010: 136; see also Scodel 1980: 317; the most recent and detailed discussion of the legend of the second youth is Kivilo 2010: 28-35, who however does not connect it with the episode of the dolphins). This episode is also told by Plutarch (Dinner of the Seven Sages 162c-f = T32 Most and The Cleverness of Animals 9840d = T33b Most) and Tzetzes (Life of Hesiod 174-5 Colonna). Other animal helpers are involved in the legend of Hesiod's death: a crow sent by the Pythia guides the Orchomenians to the poet's grave (Paus. 9.38.3-4); and Hesiod's dog helps find the murderers by barking (Plu. The Cleverness of Animals 984d, 969e = T33ab Most, Poll. 5.42 = T34 Most).

234. Ἀριαδνείας: Πίου ἀγνείας instead of Ἀριαδνείας, proposed by Nietzsche on the basis of the account of Hesiod's death by Plutarch (Dinner of the Seven Sages 162e), connects again the episode to Western Locris, where Rhion is located. A cult of Ariadne in Locris is testified only in this passage of the Certamen, and also for this reason the manuscript reading has been emended so as to get more consistency with other sources of the same episode. But the fact that the murderers try to escape to Crete (238) and are punished during this trip, is no reason to exclude a connection between this story and Ariadne. It has also been suggested that the story of Hesiod's death is an aetiological myth for this festival, which may have been performed similarly to that in Crete (Nilsson 1906: 383-4, Lefkowitz 1981: 4 n. 10). Colbeau 2005: 243-4 notes that Ariadne is often connected with Dionysus and wine, which evokes the stem of the name Oinoe.

235-40. πάντες ἐπὶ τὸν αἰγιαλὸν ... Ἀλκιδάμας ἐν Μουσεΐῳ: Lefkowitz 1981: 4 sees a connection between this punishment of Hesiod's murderers by Zeus and a Hesiodic passage: Op. 270-3: νῦν δὲ ἐγὼ μήτ' αὐτὸς ἐν ἀνθρώποισι δίκαιος / εἶην μήτ' ἐμὸς υἱός, ἐπεὶ κακὸν ἄνδρα δίκαιον / ἔμμεναι, εἰ μείζω γε δίκην ἀδικώτερος ἔξει / ἀλλὰ τά γ' οὐπω ἔολπα τελεῖν Δία μητιόεντα. As anticipated by Hesiod, Zeus' justice prevailed over the murderers. Koning 2010: 135 n. 34 finds this a tenuous interpretation, but it is not possible to exclude that this connection may have actually been made in antiquity, and may have contributed to the diffusion of this anecdote. The divine intervention by Zeus, as well as the episode of the dolphins, is omitted in the more rationalising version by Eratosthenes.

238. εἰς Κρήτην: see 234n.

240. Ἀλκιδάμας ἐν Μουσείῳ: the mention of Alcidas was one of the reasons why Nietzsche first postulated that Alcidas' work was used as a source by the author of the Certamen. The way he is mentioned also suggests that he was the main source: it seems that he is named only because an alternative version, that by Eratosthenes, was about to be quoted.

241. ἐν †ἐνηπόδῳ†: this is a particularly difficult reading. It has been variously emended (see apparatus and below) because it does not make sense, and there is no attested work by Eratosthenes with a title similar to the manuscript reading. One of the earliest and most widely accepted emendations is Goettling's ἐν Ἡσιόδῳ, based on Hiller's suggestion that Ἡσίδοσ could be a second title of Eratosthenes' poem Ἀντερινύς. That poem might have contained the story of Hesiod's death and his murderers' punishment. See Erat. fr. 17 Powell. However, there is no evidence that the Ἀντερινύς had such a second title and, as pointed out by Fraser 1972: 902 n. 200, the title Ἀντερινύς is hardly sufficient to justify the assumption that that poem dealt with the legend of Hesiod. Another fragment by Eratosthenes (fr. 21 Powell = Choerob. In Theod. Gaisf. i, p. 81) mentions Ganyctor, a character who is always linked to this legend and therefore confirms Eratosthenes' interest in it, but again this fragment does not offer a solution for this textual problem. Erat. fr. 19 Powell (= schol. Nic. Ther. 400) gives another interesting but doubtful clue: in this fragment Eratosthenes mentions Erigone's dog which, like Hesiod's, played an important role after its owner's death. This fragment is attributed by the ancient source to the Ἀντερινύς, but as far as we know that story is told in Eratosthenes' Erigone. From Eratosthenes' poetic fragments, therefore, an interest in the legend of Hesiod's death emerges quite clearly, but they do not reveal the title of the work in which he discussed it. On the other hand, there is no trace of an account of the episode of the poetic contest of Homer and Hesiod in Eratosthenes and therefore we cannot know whether or not his account of Hesiod's death was attached to the contest, as in the Certamen. A passage in Strabo (7.3.6) seems to suggest that, according to Eratosthenes, Hesiod was younger than Homer, and if it is the case then he could hardly have spoken of their contest, which presupposes the two poets being contemporaries: see Pfeiffer 1968: 164, who however does not mention Strabo's passage, and Koning 2010: 123 n. 67 and 124 n. 71. Eratosthenes' broad interests in the biographies of the poets is testified by two other fragments that attribute to him two (discordant) claims concerning Homer's chronology: see 241 F 9a (= Tat. Ad Graec. 31) and 241 F 9b (= Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.4).

Κτίμενον καὶ Ἀντιφον τοὺς Γανύκτορος: other attestations of these names for Hesiod's murderers are Plutarch (The Cleverness of Animals 969e), Pausanias (9.31.4) and Suda s.v. Ἡσίοδος. For the other couple see 226-7n. Antiphus is the name of Homeric heroes on both the Trojan (Il. 2.864, 12.191) and the Greek sides (Il. 2.678, 17.68). The name Ctimenus is not attested in archaic literature, while Ctimene (who is also the sister of Amphiphanes and Ganyctor according to Tzetzes, Life of Hesiod 155 Colonna) is Odysseus' sister (Od. 15.363). These Homeric names again suggest that the Certamen stems from intimate knowledge of the poems.

243-5. τὴν μέντοι παρθένον ... ἐαυτὴν ἀναρτῆσαι: this detail about the destiny of the girl contributes to increase the pathos that surrounds the episode of Hesiod's unjust death in this version. On the girl see also 230-2n.

245-7. φθαρεῖναι δὲ ... αὐτῶν φησιν: unlike Alcidamas, Eratosthenes is very clear about Hesiod's innocence. Protestations of the poet's innocence are found in most of the sources on the poet's death. Paus. 9.31.6 (T31 Most): τὴν δὲ ἀδελφὴν τῶν νεανίσκων οἱ μὲν ἄλλου τοῦ φασιν αἰσχύναντος Ἡσίοδον λαβεῖν οὐκ ἀληθῆ τὴν τοῦ ἀδικήματος δόξαν, οἱ δὲ ἐκείνου γενέσθαι τὸ ἔργον. Particularly apologetic seems the version by Plutarch in Dinner of the Seven Sages 162d, which confirms the positive image of Hesiod emerging from the account of the contest in the same work by Plutarch (see Introduction, pp. 18-28). According to Plutarch's account Hesiod was not even suspected to have committed the crime against his hosts' sister but only to have helped Troilus, his friend and actual perpetrator of the crime, to conceal it: ὑποψίαν ἔσχεν ὡς γνούς ἀπ' ἀρχῆς καὶ συνεπικρούψας τὸ ἀδίκημα, μηδενὸς ὦν αἴτιος. The same version features in the Suda, s.v. Ἡσίοδος: ἐτελεύτησε δὲ ἐπιξενωθείς παρ' Ἀντίφῳ καὶ Κτιμένῳ, οἱ νύκτωρ δόξαντες ἀναιρεῖν φθορέα ἀδελφῆς αὐτῶν, ἀνεῖλον τὸν Ἡσίοδον ἄκοντε.

246. Δημῳδους ὄνομα: the only other name given to Hesiod's friend in the tradition is Troilus (Plu. Dinner of the Seven Sages 162c). The name Demodes given by Eratosthenes does not seem to be attested anywhere else as a personal name. It is found as an adjective and means 'of the people, popular' (LSJ). It was used by Nietzsche and Rzach who proposed to add the name Troilus in the text (Τρωΐλου, see apparatus): this character would therefore be 'a certain man of the people, a foreigner travelling with Hesiod, called Troilus'.

247-53. ὕστερον δὲ Ὀρχομένιοι ... ἐν βασάνῳ σοφίης: the story of Hesiod's second burial follows in the text the account by Eratosthenes, but it is not impossible that it was told by Alcidamas as well. The compiler may have given two different accounts on Hesiod's murder and of the destiny of Hesiod's killers, and included at the end an anecdote told in a similar way by both sources. The story is mentioned in several other sources (Plu. fr. 82 Sandbach and Arist. fr. 524 Rose = Schol. Op. 631, Plu. Dinner of the Seven Sages 162, Paus. 9.38.3-4, Tz. Life of Hesiod 177-85 Colonna). After the Thespians destroyed Ascra, the Ascreans who survived went to Orchomenos. A plague broke out in the city and the Pythia (in Aristoteles', Pausanias' and Eratosthenes' versions) suggested taking Hesiod's bones to Orchomenus. According to Pausanias, a crow helped the Orchomenians to find Hesiod's first grave. The story of the transportation of Hesiod's bones and second burial in Orchomenos has been taken as evidence for a cult of Hesiod in that city (in particular, the beneficial power that the poet's bones were thought to have, and the fact that according to Pausanias a crow guided the Orchomenians to Hesiod's first grave). On the cult of Hesiod see Breilich 1958: 321-2, Nagy 1979: 296 and 2009: 306, Lefkowitz 1981: 10, Calame 1996, Beaulieu 2004, Clay 2004: 74-6, and Koning 2010: 134-8.

248-9. ἐπέγραψαν ... ἐπὶ τῷ τάφῳ: unlike Homer (see 333), Hesiod did not compose his own tomb inscription.

250-3. Ἀσκηρὴ μὲν πατρὶς ... ἐν βασάνῳ σοφίης: the whole text of the epigram is transmitted also in AP 7.54, Paus. 9.38.4 and Tz. Life of Hesiod 179-82 Colonna. The Greek Anthology attributes it to Mnasalces, Pausanias to Chersias. For detailed discussion of attribution and chronology of this epigram see Debiasi 2010. Like the other epigrams in the Certamen, this too presents many variant readings compared to other attestations of it. The most remarkable is Ἑλλάδι κῦδος ὀρεῖται by Pausanias at 252 (see discussion in Debiasi 2010: 263). Another tomb epigram that presupposes the story of Hesiod's second burial in Orchomenus is transmitted by Arist. fr. 565 Rose, Suda s.v. τὸ Ἡσιόδειον γῆρας, Tz. Life of Hesiod 184-5 Colonna, and is attributed to Pindar: χαῖρε δις ἠβήσας καὶ δις τάφου ἀντιβολήσας / Ἡσίοδ', ἀνθρώποις μέτρον ἔχων σοφίης. See Scodel 1980.

254-5. ὁ δὲ Ὅμηρος ... περιερχόμενος ἔλεγε τὰ ποιήματα: the text now starts to describe Homer's artistic production and travels after the contest. For Homer's activity as a travelling poet, as opposed to Hesiod's stationary stance, see 56n.

255-60. πρῶτον μὲν ... Ὅμηρου εἶναι: the text attributes to Homer the Thebaid and, with some caution, the Epigoni. Their position in the sequence of the works produced by Homer, after the Margites and before his two major poetic works Iliad and Odyssey, reflects the status of the cyclic epics in antiquity: see e.g. Aristotle's view that Iliad and Odyssey 'surpass all other poems in diction and thought' (Po. 1459b 16: λέξει καὶ διανοίᾳ πάντα ὑπερβέβληκεν). Although they were considered minor works, the insertion of Thebaid and Epigoni here serves to highlight the extent of Homer's knowledge of the epic past and the range of his artistic production. Both poems belong to the Theban saga, and the choice of these two works among all those belonging to the Epic Cycle allows the text to present Homer as an expert of the Theban expedition as well as the Trojan one, dealt with in Iliad and Odyssey (275-6). It also shows how consistent Homer's knowledge was because, as the ancient public may have known, acquaintance with some of the events of the Theban saga is presupposed in the Iliad (see Davies 1989b: 22-3). The Thebaid, in comparison with other poems of the Cycle, enjoyed a good reputation and this too may have encouraged its inclusion in this selective list of poems by Homer. Pausanias claims that it was his favourite Homeric poem after the Iliad and the Odyssey (Paus. 9.9.5: ἐγὼ δὲ τὴν ποίησιν ταύτην μετὰ γε Ἰλιάδα καὶ τὰ ἔπη τὰ ἐς Ὀδυσσέα ἐπαινῶ μάλιστα.). The attribution of the Thebaid to Homer may be very ancient: according to Pausanias it goes back to Callinus, in the seventh century BC, and seems to have been usually accepted in antiquity (Paus. 9.9.5: τὰ δὲ ἔπη ταῦτα Καλλῖνος ἀφικόμενος αὐτῶν ἐς μνήμην ἔφησεν Ὅμηρον τὸν ποιήσαντα εἶναι, Καλλίνῳ δὲ πολλοί τε καὶ ἄξιοι λόγου κατὰ ταῦτα ἔγνωσαν. On this testimony see, however, Bowie 2010: 152). Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 9 too depicts Homer as the author of a poem concerning the Theban cycle, although the work that in the Life is called Amphiaraus' expedition to Thebes may be indicating 'not the whole Thebais but a partial narrative covering perhaps Eriphyle's machinations and the seer's instruction of his son' (West 2003b: 9). It is uncertain whether Herodotus was referring to the Thebaid in 5.67 when he mentions the 'Homeric poems in which it is the Argives and Argos which are primarily the theme of the songs' (τῶν Ὀμηρείων ἐπέων εἵνεκα, ὅτι Ἀργεῖοί τε καὶ Ἄργος τὰ πολλὰ πάντα ὑμνέεται): see Cingano 1985 and West 2003b: 8. If he does, this confirms that Herodotus too accepts the attribution of that poem to Homer, although at 4.32 Herodotus denies the attribution to Homer of the other Theban poem mentioned here, the Epigoni (see below). In other passages the authorship of the Thebaid is dealt with more vaguely (e.g. Ath. 465e: ὁ τὴν κυκλικὴν Θηβαΐδα πεποικώς; Schol. S. O.C. 1375: ὁ τὴν κυκλικὴν Θηβαΐδα ποιήσας; Apollod. 1.8.4: ὁ γράψας τὴν Θηβαίδα), but its attribution to Homer is never challenged explicitly, and – importantly – no other author's name is associated with the Thebaid in extant testimonia. By contrast, the Epigoni was less widely accepted as Homeric: Herodotus, for example, expresses his doubts at 4.32: ἔστι δὲ καὶ Ὀμήρῳ ἐν Ἐπιγόνοισι, εἰ δὴ τῷ ἔόντι γε Ὅμηρος ταῦτα τὰ ἔπεα ἐποίησε, and our text seems to share them: see 260n. The scarcity of fragments and testimonia makes it difficult to understand why Homeric authorship was doubted or denied. Aristophanes in his Peace quotes the verse transmitted here as the incipit of this poem (see 87-8n.) and the scholium to that Aristophanic verse attributes the poem to Antimachos of Teos.

256. ἔπη ,ζ: in the case of the two Cyclic poems and of Iliad and Odyssey the text gives the number of lines for each work – a detail that would suit a school environment. The manuscript reads ἔπη ,ξ (60,000 verses) for the Thebaid and ἔπη ξ (60 verses) for the Epigoni. Both numbers are implausible and the emendation ,ζ (7,000) proposed by Hermann is unanimously accepted in both cases. Welcker 1835, I: 204 suggests that the number may indicate the quantity of the books of the poems, rather than that of their lines, but considering that the length of Iliad and Odyssey is expressed in lines (275 and 276), it stands to reason that the text is giving the number of lines in this case too (see also West 1967: 447 who argues that the indication of the number of books would be 'inappropriate in the context'). The only other known source that might have contained information about the length of the two poems is the Borgian table, a marble fragment that preserves a list of title of epic poems, their authors and lengths, but the length of the Thebaid is not visible and the presence of the Epigoni is only reconstructed. See McLeod 1985.

257: the Certamen is an important source for the first verses of the Thebaid, and of the Epigoni (259). The incipit of the Thebaid is attested nowhere else; for the Aristophanic passage that transmits the same verse that is said here to be the incipit of the Epigoni, see 107-8n. The fact that also another source, the scholium to that Aristophanic passage, claims that the verse is the incipit of the Epigoni (although attributing it to another poet), suggests that the information given here is reliable. Another Homeric biography transmitting an incipit of a poem of the Epic Cycle, the Little Iliad, is Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 16 and also in this case there is no reason to doubt the reliability of this piece of information (see Introduction on Plutarch, pp. 18-28).

258. Ἐπιγόνους: the manuscript reading ἐπειγομένου does not make sense here, and the emendation proposed by Barnes is necessarily to be accepted both because the Epigoni is the sequel of the previously mentioned Thebaid, and because the verse that follows is attributed to the same work (although the work itself is attributed to a different author) in Sch. Arist. Pac. 1270.

259. See 257n.

260. φασὶ γὰρ τινες καὶ ταῦτα Ὅμηρου εἶναι: this claim may be interpreted as referring only to the Epigoni, rather than to both epics, and tallies with widespread doubts about Homer's authorship of the Epigoni (see 255-60n.). This may be a way for the text to defend its own scholarly authority, after reporting more imaginative biographical stories about Hesiod and Homer. If this is right, then there is no need to think that these words are 'evidently interpolated' and that 'they cannot have been written by a man who has just stated as a fact that Homer did recite these among his poems' (West 1967: 447 n. 1).

260-4. ἀκούσαντες ... οὕτως: Homer is now asked to compose the funeral epigram to be engraved on the tomb of Midas, and after that he receives a silver cup and dedicates it to Apollo. Midas is a king of Phrygia who ruled, according to Eusebius, between 738 and 696 BC. For discussion on his funeral monument see Raubitscheck 1969: 13-15, Munn 2006: 70-3. Although this episode, which involves Homer's synchronisation with a historical figure, could have allowed reflection on Homer's chronology, there seems to be none in extant sources. The only time Homer and Midas are mentioned together in a discussion concerning chronology, the source (Diogenes Laertius 1.89) strongly denies the possibility that they could be contemporary, and on this ground also rejects the Homeric authorship of the Midas' epigram. Synchronisation with Midas was instead proposed for Terpander (by Hellanicus, 4 F 85b; discussion in Kivilo 2010: 159-60). The insertion of this episode here is functional to the development of the narrative. As West 1967: 447-8 remarks, this story parallels the episode of Hesiod's victory of the tripod at the contest (both include invitation by sons of a dead king, prize, dedication, and inscription). Although Avezzù 1982: XXX, 48 and 87 finds this a weak parallel, all these similarities between the two episodes seem to be more than coincidental. The episode indeed seems to be meant to re-establish Homer's credentials as a poet after the contest and is used as a means of securing future fame for him: see below 271-4n. West also suggests that the inclusion of this episode into the contest narrative may stem from Alcidas, as he tended to fit Homer and Hesiod into a similar story-pattern (oracle, death, epitaph). It is impossible to establish with certainty whether Alcidas included this episode in his narrative or not (cf. Avezzù 1982: 87: 'se la coppa è un parallelo, seppur inadeguato, del tripode, non per questo si dimostra che l'esigenza di contrappesare la sconfitta col dono sia alcidamantea'), but West's suggestion seems attractive.

265-70. χαλκῇ ... τέθαιπται: the epigram for Midas' tomb is one of the two so-called Homeric epigrams reported in Certamen (the other one is at 281-5). These are short poems that Homer is said to have composed for specific occasions, usually on the spot. Many of them are transmitted in the Ps.-Herodotean Life of Homer. Markwald 1986 remains the most thorough study of these texts. This epigram is transmitted by several other sources (see apparatus), including the Vita Herodotea, which offers the only other biographical framework for the quotation. As usual in the tradition of the epigrams reported in the Certamen, each of its extant sources presents the text with variant readings, but the case of this epigram is particularly interesting: some of the sources present it in a shorter form and some invert the order of the verses. Variants probably reflect oral circulation of the epigram (Gutzwiller 2010: 243). Some of these variations are significant: Livingstone and Nisbet 2010: 43 argue that the reason why Plato omits two lines (267-8) is that this is necessary for Socrates to make his point about the structure of this text (see below); similarly, it can be argued that a fuller version of the text, that includes those two lines that strongly emphasise the concept expressed in the line that precedes them, contributes to making the point of the Certamen: the epigram will perpetuate Midas' fame, but at the same time is a means by which Homer's fame too becomes everlasting (see 271-4n.). Variants attested only in the Certamen are: ἐπὶ σήματος ἡμαί at 265; πλήθωσι and περικλύζη at 267; φαίνη at 268; σημανέω at 270. Omissions and reversal of the order of the verses concern mainly lines 267 and 268: Plato, Favorinus, Dio Chrysostomus and the Anthologia Palatina transmit only four verses and omit both lines; Philoponus and the Anthologia Planudea omit only 267. The Vita Herodotea and Diogenes Laertius invert the order of the two verses. Indeed the possibility of reversing the order of the verses was considered in antiquity as a peculiar characteristic of this epigram and Plato mentions it precisely because of its structure. In Phdr. 264b he criticises this epigram on the ground that 'it makes no difference whether any line of it is put first or last' (οὐδὲν διαφέρει αὐτοῦ πρῶτον ἢ ὕστατόν τι λέγεσθαι), because the speech lacks organisation and a fixed structure. The Neoplatonist Hermias, commenting on this Platonic passage, claims that these epigrams are called 'triangular, because it is possible to start from whatever verse one wishes' (In Phdr. 231 Couvreur: τινὲς τὰ τοιαῦτα ἐπιγράμματα τρίγωνα καλοῦσιν, ἐπειδὴ ὅθεν ἂν ἐθέλῃς δύνασθαι ἄρξασθαι). Philoponus (In APo. 156) calls this structure τὸ σχῆμα κύκλος. Ancient readers therefore were aware of the fact that fluidity was the main peculiarity of this epigram, which makes it futile to try and identify a possible original version of the text (contra e.g. Weber 1917, who suggests that lines 267 and 268 are a later addition to the original text that included only the first and the last three verses; Raubitschek 1968: 14 tried to determine the original order of the verses by reconstructing their position on the monument). The attribution of the Midas' epigram to Homer was not unanimously accepted in antiquity. Only Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. and the Anthologia Planudea attribute it to him. Plato is not explicit: he either does not know or rejects Homeric attribution (Beecroft 2010: 71 n. 18). The poet who shared the attribution of this epigram with Homer was Cleobulus of Lindos, one of the Seven Sages. The Anthologia Palatina testifies to this double attribution with the lemma ΟΜΗΡΟΥ οί δὲ ΚΛΕΟΒΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΛ ΛΙΝΔΙΟΥ. Diogenes Laertius attributes it to Cleobulus on the basis of a passage from Simonides, where the poet criticises a passage by Cleobulus that compares some natural elements to a stone, and because of the difficulties of making Homer and Midas contemporaries. For modern discussion on the relationship between the quotation from Simonides and the Midas' epigram see Kegel 1962: 60, De Vries 1969: 212, Ford 2002: 105-9.

271-4. λαβὼν δὲ ... ὀπάζοις: after composing this epigram Homer is awarded a silver cup, which he dedicates to Apollo at Delphi in the hope that the god may grant him fame. Homer's request seems to be fulfilled when, at the end of his career (see 315-21), he composes the Hymn to Apollo, which guarantees eternal fame to the 'blind bard from Chios'. This episode has thus been inserted in the narrative as part of the overall reversal of the final verdict of the contest in favour of Homer and to reinforce his relationship with Apollo. This particular episode follows naturally after the epigram for Midas, since both episodes are concerned with fame and Midas too is connected to Apollo and Delphi (Hdt. 1.14).

275-6. μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα ... ἐπῶν μ,εφ: Homer composes his major works, the Iliad and the Odyssey, at a late stage in his career. The text specifies that Homer composes the Odyssey when he has already composed the Iliad (πεποιηκῶς ἤδη τὴν Ἰλιάδα), and thus takes part in the lively ancient debate concerning which of the two poems was composed first (see e.g. Lucian VH 2.20 – discussed in the Introduction, pp. 35-8 – and Seneca, De Brevitate Vitae 13.2, On Sublime 9.12-13).

The claim of the priority of the Iliad allows for a correspondence between the order of the composition of the poems and that of the events they narrate: Homer first sings the Theban saga (255-9), then the Trojan war and finishes with Odysseus' return home. Colbeau 2005: 260 suggests that Homer is said to have composed the Iliad before the Odyssey because it was considered the most important of the two poems. But the Certamen seems to present the two works as equally important and rather sets up a contrast between these two works and the other Homeric epics. The composition of Iliad and Odyssey is not linked to any specific place, but is rather mentioned in between Homer's visits to Delphi and Athens: the text may be remaining purposefully vague on the matter, or making the poems gravitate towards Athens where Homer is directed. In the agonistic section, Homer already recited verses from the Odyssey (9.6-11 at 84-9) and the Iliad (13.126-33 + 13.339-44 at ll. 191-204), but their provenance was not stated. This seeming inconsistency suits narrative needs: each sequence of Homeric verses was an appropriate response to a specific challenge, while the composition of Iliad and Odyssey fits this particular point of the narrative. West 1967: 447 notes that the mention of the composition of Iliad and Odyssey is odd and if Alcidas had included it in his narrative 'he would surely have done it less awkwardly'. He concludes that this section of our text cannot derive from Alcidas' narrative. It is hard to believe that Alcidas did not mention the composition of Homer's two major poems in the Museion, but admittedly it is not possible to know whether he did so in the same point of the narrative as in our Certamen, and how much he was concerned with the internal consistency of the narrative framework. The problem, in any case, hardly seems pronounced: Homer may have composed some extemporaneous verses which he then included in his major poems. The text gives the length of the two poems in line numbers, as it did for the Thebaid and the Epigoni (256, 258). In this case too the manuscript readings seem problematic, as is often the case with the transmission of numbers. According to L the Odyssey would be 12,500 lines long (μβφ) and the Iliad 15,000 (με). Nietzsche emended the readings on the basis of the number of lines in the current versions of the two poems: 12,109 for the Odyssey and 15,693 for the Iliad. The copyist (or his source) may have easily written the symbol for 500 (φ) in the wrong place, attaching it to the Odyssey rather than to the Iliad.

276-85. παραγενόμενον ... Κρονίων: Homer goes from Delphi to Athens. There he is hosted by king Medon and performs an epigram in the council chamber. For the choice of performing an epigram see 277n. The fact that Homer is hosted and honoured by a king works as a reversal of and a compensation for the unfavourable judgement on Homer's poetry by another king, Panoides. Although Athens is here said to be ruled by a monarch, there are also hints in the text that prefigure the democratic constitution of the city: king Medon (who was himself seen in some of the sources as a figure of transition between monarchy and another form of government, the perpetual archonship – see 277-8n.) is in the βουλευτήριον, a building that in Athens was built at the end of the sixth c. BC to host the meetings of the βουλή (see 278n.); the epigram praises the people sitting in an assembly as a beautiful sight and, especially when compared to other versions, the text appears democratically oriented (see 281-5n.). The epigram seems to foster the image of Homer as a democratic poet, which would fit a fifth- or fourth-century BC source.

277. εἰς Ἀθήνας: the scarce presence of verses in praise of Athens in the Homeric poems may explain why Homer performs an epigram there – and a piece from the Iliad at Argos (288-301). That Homer in his works praised those two cities to different degrees was acknowledged already in antiquity: at Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 27, Homer composes verses for Athens and adds them to the Iliad 'κατανοήσας δὲ ὅτι ἐς μὲν Ἄργος πολλὰ καὶ μεγάλα εἶεν εὐλογίαι πεποιημένα, ἐς δὲ τὰς Ἀθήνας οὐ'. Late sources testify that Homer was sometimes thought to be Athenian by birth (cf. e.g. Ps.-Plut. Vit. Hom. 2.2; Suda s.v. Ὅμηρος 2; Anon. Vit. Hom. 2.2; Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.2), the most important supporters of this view being Aristarchus and Dionysius Thrax. For Aristarchus, who seems to have based his claim on Homer's use of the dual, see Sch. ad Il. 13.197 (on which Janko 1992: 71). For studies on the successful Athenian strategy for the appropriation of the Homeric texts, that may have involved a connection between the Peisistratids and the Homeridae to different degrees, see West 1999, Graziosi 2002: 220-7 and Nagy 2010.

277-8. παρὰ Μέδοντι τῷ βασιλεῖ τῶν Ἀθηναίων: ancient sources disagree as to whether Medon was a king or rather the first of the archons elected for life. Aristotle in his Constitution of the Athenians expresses the existing uncertainties about this issue (Arist. Ath. 3, on which see Von Fritz and Kapp 1950: 150-2 and Rhodes 1981: 66 and 100). Hellanicus (4 F 125) does not specify whether the young Medon would become king or archon. According to Pausanias, with Medon's dynasty the political role of the members of the royal family changed (Paus. 4.5.10). By presenting him as a king, the Certamen reverses the outcome of the contest due to another king's verdict (see also the episode of the silver cup dedicated by Homer to the Muses, which responds to Hesiod's victory and dedication of the tripod after the contest: 260-4n.).

278. ἐν δὲ τῷ βουλευτηρίῳ: buildings known as βουλευτήρια are testified to in Greece from the late sixth century BC onwards, and the old βουλευτήριον in Athens dates back to the same period (Rhodes 1972: 18 and 30).

281-5. ἀνδρὸς ... Κρονίων: for Homer reciting an epigram rather than a piece from the Iliad or the Odyssey see 277n. This epigram is transmitted by two other sources, the Vita Herodotea and the Suda. As the Suda transmits it in the section derived from the Vita Herodotea, it gives the text in almost the same form (for the few minor differences see apparatus). The differences from the version of the Certamen are much greater: the epigram is recited in different contexts, and there are substantial differences in the form of the epigram itself. In the Certamen Homer recites it at Athens before king Medon, in order to praise the fire burning in the council chamber. In the Vita Herodotea Homer recites it at Samos on his way to Athens. In the Ps.-Herodotean version of the episode the verses are said to be pronounced either because a fire was burning in the room, as in the Certamen, or in order to encourage the clansmen to light one. The version of the epigram performed here has been seen as fitting the Athenian democratic regime. The version transmitted in the Vita Herodotea and in Suda has the verses χρήματα δ' αὔξει οἶκον· ἀτὰρ γεραροὶ βασιλῆες / ἡμενοὶ εἰν ἀγορῇ κόσμος τ' ἄλλοισιν ὀρᾶσθαι ('property enhances the house, and proud kings / as they sit in the gathering are a fine sight for the others' Transl. West adapted: he emends ἄλλοισιν in λαοῖσιν and translates 'for the people'). For a study of these verses see Markwald 1986: 210-13 and Colbeau 2005: 261-2. The Certamen reads λαὸς δ' εἰν ἀγορῇσι καθήμενος εἰσοράσθαι (283). West 2003: 347 n. 16 notes that the line in the Certamen is a democratic adaptation of the two lines in the version of the Ps.-Herodotus. See more recently Beecroft 2010: 70 n. 16 and 88, who rightly notes that the two versions suited the two different political regimes of the cities where the epigram was recited, the Samian oligarchy and the Athenian democracy. See also Markwald 1986: 214, who suggests that the Athenian version is more recent.

285. ἡματι ... Κρονίων: this is the only occurrence of this verse; it is not included in the Vita Herodotea. This verse suits the context in the Certamen, where the epigram is explicitly said to be recited when the weather is cold (278-9: ψυχους ὄντος). The Vita Herodotea does not emphasise this point.

286-7: ἐκεῖθεν δὲ παραγενόμενος εἰς Κόρινθον ἐρραψώδει τὰ ποιήματα. τιμηθεὶς δὲ μεγάλως: Homer's visit to Corinth is 'uneventful' (West: 447 n. 3). There is no mention of the piece of poetry Homer recites or of the people he meets, but we are told that he is greatly honoured after his performance (287). Thus, despite the lack of details, this visit contributes further to the construction of a Panhellenic Homer, who travels extensively and is honoured across different cities. Nagy 2010: 53 suggests, based on the use of the verb τιμάω here (287), that this anecdote shows that Homer was honoured as a local cult hero in Corinth and that anecdotes such as these were an aetiology that explained the reality of seasonally recurring Homeric performances at a given festival. There is no corroborating evidence for a cult of Homer or for such festivals in Corinth, but the presence of Corinth among the cities Homer visits indicates that it too may have claimed some connection with the poet. Corinth features in some passages of the Iliad, and this may have facilitated or inspired its mention here: the first mention of Corinth is in the Catalogue of Ships (2.570) where it is favourably defined as prosperous (ἀφνειόν τε Κόρινθον). These verses may be suitable for a performance by Homer in Corinth: the verses he performs in Argos are from the Catalogue of Ships too, and in general that section of the Iliad offers suitable material for local performances: see further 289-301n. The second mention of Corinth in the Iliad is at 13.664, where the poet tells the story of the Corinthian Euchenor (defined, like the city itself, as ἀφνειός). West 1967: 447 n. 3 connects Homer's visit to Corinth to the mention of Ἐφύρη in Il. 6.152 and 6.210 (Glaucus' speech): on the basis of a claim by Aristarchus, according to whom Homer refers to Corinth by the name Ἐφύρη in the character speeches, but by the more recent name Κόρινθος when he speaks in his own voice (Sch. ad Il. 6.152), West concludes that Homer 'is made to visit Corinth, in this account, simply to make sure that he is acquainted with the place'. But the actual identification of Ephyre with Corynthus in this Iliadic passage is still debated: see for discussion Kirk 1990: 177 and Graziosi and Haubold 2010: 119.

286. ἐρραψώδει: for the use of this verb in the Certamen see 56n.

287-8. παραγίνεται εἰς Ἀργος καὶ λέγει ἐκ τῆς Ἰλιάδος τὰ ἔπη τάδε: unlike Athens (277n.), Argos plays a major role in the Iliad, which may have inspired Homer's visit to this city and his choice to perform a passage from the Iliad. Argos' predominance in Homeric epics was acknowledged already in antiquity. Herodotus (5.67.1) informs that Clisthenes, the tyrant of Sicyon, banned the performance of Homeric epics from his city because of their excessive praise of Argos, against which Sicyon had just engaged in a war. Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 27 compares the attention devoted in the Homeric poems to Athens and to Argos.

289-301. οἱ δ' Ἄργος ... πτολέμοιο: this is the passage on Argos from the Catalogue of Ships (Il. 2.559-68), an appropriate choice for Homer to perform in the different places he travels, because each community is represented in the Catalogue and will cherish 'its' lines. The efficacy of the verses from the Catalogue is shown in the Vita Herodotea too (27-8), where Homer inserts in the Catalogue verses for Athens before going there. Moreover, sections from the Catalogue may be easily detached from their original context and be recited on their own; they also lend themselves to the omission or insertion of verses. For the suggestion that Homer may have recited a passage from this Catalogue at Corinth too, see 286-7n. As usual, the quotation in the Certamen presents some variant readings compared to the text as we have it in the Iliad (see below for discussion). The Certamen also transmits three verses that are not present in the Iliadic manuscripts (lines 294, 300, 301). Even though we do not know their provenance, they are recognisably constructed by using elements well attested in the hexameter tradition. One of them (301) is also known from another source (AP 14.73.6).

292. νῆσόν τ' Αἶγιναν Μάσητά τε κοῦροι Ἀχαιῶν: the Homeric text (Il. 2.562) reads οἱ τ' ἔχον Αἶγιναν and S records this reading in the margin of the line. The verse as transmitted in the Certamen is also in Hes. fr. 204.47 M.-W. Strabo (8.6.10) informs us that the two readings coexisted and were used to distinguish between two different places with the same name:: Αἶγινα δ' ἔστι μὲν καὶ τόπος τις τῆς Ἐπιδαυρίας, ἔστι δὲ καὶ νῆσος πρὸ τῆς ἠπείρου ταύτης, ἣν ἐν τοῖς ἀρτίως παρατεθεισῖν ἔπεσι βούλεται φράζειν ὁ ποιητής: διὸ καὶ γράφουσιν τινες 'νῆσόν τ' Αἶγιναν' ἀντὶ τοῦ 'οἱ τ' ἔχον Αἶγιναν,' διαστελλόμενοι τὴν ὁμωνυμίαν. Aegina mentioned here is the island; hence the variant is not out of place. The manuscript reading Αἶγιναν τε Μάσητά needs to be emended by deleting τε, for metrical reasons.

294. Τυδεΐδης οὗ πατρὸς ἔχων μένος Οἰνεΐδαο: this verse is not transmitted

in the Homeric manuscripts but draws fully on Homeric hexameters. Τυδεΐδης appears at the beginning of the line at e.g. Il. 5.18; οὗ πατρός in the same metrical position at Od. 7.3 and ἔχων μένος at Il. 12.96; Οἶνεΐδαο closes the verse at Il. 5.813. As already suggested (Colbeau 2005: 265), this hexameter may have been inserted here to give a piece of information about Diomedes (the fact that he is the son of Tydeus) which is very common in the Iliad, but not present in this specific passage. More generally, the fact that this verse did not make it into the vulgata of the Iliad may be due to the difficult position of Tydeus as a role model for his son Diomedes in the Iliad (on which see Graziosi and Haubold 2010: 38 and 140).

296. Εὐρύπυλος: in the Iliad the character mentioned in this passage (2.565) is Εὐρύαλος, an Argive hero mentioned in two other episodes: his aristeia at 6.20-8, and his competition on the occasion of the funerary games for Patroclus at 23.677-99. Eurypylus is an Iliadic character too (e.g. 2.734-7: he was the leader of forty ships), but his presence here is slightly problematic. Kirk 1985: 234-5 discusses the realm of Eurypylus as presented in the Catalogue of Ships and remarks that its borders are quite vague. He is not explicitly said to be Argive, and another source (Apollod. 3.131) claims he was Thessalian. Moreover, it is in fact Euryalus who is the son of Mecisteus (see 297), while Eurypylus is the son of Euemon (Il. 11.575-6). Furthermore, as Kirk notes, Eurypylus appears at several points in the poem and seems to be a well-known figure in the epic tradition: this would justify the confusion between these two names. Wilamowitz consequently emends the name given in the Certamen with that transmitted in the Iliadic manuscripts, but he is alone in doing so.

297. Μηκιστέως: in the Iliadic manuscripts many variant readings are attested for the genitive form of this name, and Μηκιστέως, which is what L transmits, is one of those. It does not seem problematic and it is also the reading that Van Thiel accepts in his edition of the Iliad in this verse. There is no reason to emend it in Μηκιστέος (Rzach, see apparatus). West publishes Μηκιστήος in the text of the Iliad and keeps Μηκιστέως in the text of the Certamen. For discussion of the genitive forms listed above, see Kirk 1985: 211 and Janko 1992: 264.

298. ἐκ πάντων: this verse, as transmitted in at Iliad 2.567, begins with the word συμπάντων. This word is found in the same metrical position also at Il. 1.90. But ἐκ πάντων too is used at the beginning of Homeric hexameters: cf. Il. 4.96 and Od. 2.433.

300-1. Like 294, these two verses are not present in our version of the Iliad. But whatever their origins are, they fit well this encomiastic context for Argos. While 300 is attested nowhere else, 301 is transmitted also in AP 14.73.6. In this epigram the Pythia, responding to a Megarian enquiry, claims that the Argives are the best warriors and uses this very same verse to characterise them (vv. 4-6: ἀλλ' ἔτι καὶ τῶν εἰσιν ἀμείνονες, οἳ τὸ μεσηγὺ / Τίρυνθος ναίουσι καὶ Ἀρκαδίας πολυμήλου, / Ἀργεῖοι λινοθώρηκες, κέντρα πτολέμοιο). ἐν δ' ἄνδρες is at the beginning of the hexameter in the verse ἐν δ' ἄνδρες ναίουσι πολύρρηνες πολυβοῦται which occurs at Il. 9.153 and 9.295; ἄνδρες is in the same metrical position at Il. 10.525 (ὅσος ἄνδρες), 21.405 (τόν ῥ' ἄνδρες), Od. 9.126 (οὐδ' ἄνδρες). πολέμοιο is in the same metrical position at e.g. Il. 3.150: γήραϊ δὴ πολέμοιο; δαήμονες at Od. 8.263. ἐστιχόωντο occurs nine times in the Iliad, eight of which at verse end, as here (e.g. Il. 2.92). λινοθώρηκες: only the singular form λινοθώρηξ occurs in Homer, at Il. 2.529 (Aias the lesser) and 2.830 (Araphius), both times at verse end. At least in the case of Aias, the linen corslet is not characterised positively (see Kirk 1985: 202). κέντρα πτολέμοιο is found only in the occurrences of this verse (Certamen, AP and quotations from AP).

302-8. τῶν δὲ Ἀργείων ... εἰς Χίον ἀποστέλλειν: these are the highest honours Homer has been awarded so far: an actual cult, while the poet himself is still alive. This happens after a performance of a passage from the Iliad, as it is the highest achievement of Homer's poetic production at this point in the narrative. The honours he receives on this occasion are presented in climactic order too, and with an effect of accumulation (gifts, statue, and daily, monthly, yearly and quadrennial sacrifices). This episode seems to mark a turning point for Homer, for some elements in the text point to his achievement of lasting fame, granted by the statue and the epigram inscribed on it (compare this to Homer's epigram for Midas' funeral monument and its emphasis on the perpetuation of fame: 271-4n.) and to his divine nature (he is offered periodic sacrifices thereafter, and is called θεῖος in the epigram). Another interesting mention of a cult of Homer at Argos is a passage from Aelian that seems to confirm that the honours the Argives paid to Homer were in fact divine, as the poet is invoked together with Apollo (Ael. VH 9.15). Archaeological and literary evidence shows that Homer was an object of cult, which may have included the offer of sacrifices too, in several other cities: for surveys of available testimonia see Pinkwart 1965: 169-73, Brink 1972, and Clay 2004: 74-6 and 136-43.

304-5. αὐτὸν μὲν πολυτελέσι δωρεαῖς ἐτίμησαν: Homer has received and dedicated a silver cup (271-4) and has been honoured by a king (276); by making him receive 'costly gifts', which parallel the gifts offered by the organisers of the poetic contest that Homer lost (66-7), the compensation for the outcome of the competition seems complete.

305. εἰκόνα δὲ χαλκῇν ἀναστήσαντες: with this statue, Homer's fame is given material and lasting support. For another mention of a statue of the poet in his biographies see Ps.-Plut. Vit. Hom. 1.4: that statue is in Colophon and an epigram was inscribed on it too. See West 2003: 411 n. 34 for discussion of that monument. For dedication of statues of poets, and especially those of Homer, see Clay 2004: 89-92. For surveys and discussion of ancient portrayals of Homer see Boehringer 1939, Mansuelli 1963, Richter 1965, and Schefold 1997.

305-8: ἐψηφίσαντο θυσίαν ... ἀποστέλλειν: the number of sacrifices offered to Homer (every day, month, year and four years) seems hyperbolic, but this surely mirrors the fact that the Argives were ὑπερβολῇ χαρέντες (302).

307-8. θυσίαν πενταετηρίδα εἰς Χίον ἀποστέλλειν: it is not possible to know whether Argos (or indeed any other city) ever sent such sacrifices to Chios to honour Homer; Nagy 2010: 81 assumes on the basis of Pl. Ti. 26e that θυσία means not only ‘sacrifice’ but also, metonymically, ‘festival’, and more specifically a Panhellenic festival; he therefore suggests that this passage hints to a quadrennial festival in Chios during which Homeric poetry was performed, and sees it as a prototype of the Great Panathenaia in Athens – but it is also possible, of course, that this passage is itself modelled on the Great Panathenaea. The fact that the Argives send sacrifices to Chios seems to suggest that they saw Chios as the poet’s birthplace: in fact this connection seems to have been made already in the sixth-fifth c. BC by another Argive, Acusilaus, who reports that the descendants of Homer, the Homeridae, are from Chios (2 F 2). Nevertheless, there was also a tradition according to which Homer was born in Argos (Ps.-Plut. Vit. Hom. 2.2; Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.1; Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.1, which mentions Philocorus as a source, see 328 F 209), but the Certamen does not acknowledge it.

307. <καὶ> ἄλλην θυσίαν: the syntax of this sentence does not flow smoothly in the manuscript text, and the insertion of καί (Westermann) is the easiest way to solve this problem; καί may well have been in L’s antigraph and fallen because of an haplography (note the repetition of καί throughout the sentence).

309-14. θεῖος Ὅμηρος ... ἀμφέπει ἀθανάτων: the epigram confirms the image of Homer that is emerging from the rest of the text. The formula θεῖος Ὅμηρος, emphatically placed at the beginning of the epigram, underlines the poet’s divine nature, which is also stressed at the very end of the epigram by τιμαῖς ἀμφέπει ἀθανάτων; Ἑλλάδα [...] πᾶσαν ἐκόσμησεν and ἔξοχα δ’ Ἀργεῖους underline Homer’s ability to appeal to a Panhellenic poet, that emerged ever since the contest, and at the same time to each community he visited thereafter. Some features of this epigram are found in other epigrams on Homer too. For θεῖος Ὅμηρος see 1-2n.; ἐκόσμησεν recalls the epithet κοσμήτωρ given to him in his funerary epigram at 348; for Ἑλλάδα [...] πᾶσαν

cf. AP 7.7.1 (Ἐνθάδε θεῖος Ὅμηρος, ὃς Ἑλλάδα πᾶσαν ᾄεισε) and Ps.-Plu. Vit. Hom. 1.4 (... σὺ γὰρ κλέος Ἑλλάδι πάσῃ ... θῆκας ἐς αἶδιον).

309-12: these lines are preserved in P.Duk. inv. 665, seventh century AD. See pp. 86-9. Note especially the variants θεοτειχέα in the manuscript and ἐριανχέα in the papyrus, line 4.

310. καλλιπεῖ σοφίῃ: despite losing the contest on the ground that his verses did not have ethical value, Homer confirms here his reputation for wisdom, as well as for verbal art. The manuscript reading καλλιπέιη σοφίῃ τε ('with beautiful language and wisdom', where καλλιπέιη is a form for καλλιπεῖα) does not allow the pentameter to scan. The correction καλλιπεῖ σοφίῃ ('with wisdom elegant in diction') was proposed by S in the margin and has been unanimously accepted. P.Duk. inv. 665 l. 2 reads καλλιπεῖ and Lapini (apud Menci 2012: 46) suggests that this confirms the circulation of the manuscript's mistaken reading; Menci thinks it more likely to be a iotacism.

313. μεγαλόπολις: the reading of L μεγαλόπολις needs a correction for metrical reasons and μεγαλόπολις (S above the line) is a satisfying emendation. But, interestingly, this form is attested nowhere else; furthermore, μεγαλόπολις is never attested for Argos: it is attested for Athens (Pind. Pyht. 7.1) and Troy (Eur. Tr. 1291): see Colbeau 2005: 268.

315-21. ἐνδιατρίψας δὲ τῇ πόλει ... ἐν τῷ τῆς Ἀρτέμιδος ἱερῷ: Homer's last poetic performance, the Hymn to Apollo in Delos, is the peak of his career. Through this episode Homer achieves what he has been seeking throughout his lifetime: a privileged relationship with the gods, lasting fame, and universal acknowledgement of his poetic skills. The episode is best read together with Homer's visit to Delphi to dedicate a silver cup to Apollo and subsequent request for future fame (271-4n.), and represents the fulfilment of the poet's wish. The durability of his fame is also guaranteed by the inscription of the Hymn on a tablet (see 320n.). This episode celebrates Homer as the Panhellenic poet: in the other episodes Homer was always praised and celebrated by each community he visited, but the celebration remained mostly on a local level. Here, for the first time, Homer performs in a Panionian context (316n.), and his success on this occasion results in the attribution to him of the title of ‘common citizen’ of all the Ionians (κοινὸς πολίτης, 319-20n.). The process of Panhellenisation of Homer is historically connected to the image of the blind bard from Chios presented in the Hymn to Apollo, as it is the one accepted and promoted by the Athenians and thus became predominant. The Certamen makes this connection too and therefore shows to be influenced by this tradition and to engage with it. Although an explicit claim of Homer’s Chian origin is always avoided in the Certamen, as it would contradict the very opening of the work (esp. 7-8), the text seems to gravitate towards the Chian tradition as Homer assumes the role of the Panhellenic poet: see also 302-8, where the Argives are said to send sacrifices to Chios to honour the poet.

315. διέπλευσεν εἰς Δῆλον: this is the only account of Homer’s visit to Delos in his biographies. The tradition of Homer reciting the Hymn to Apollo in Delos is nevertheless old: (Thuc. 3.104.3, and see Introduction on Hesiod, esp. pp. 14-18). This tradition has certainly influenced the shaping of this episode of the Certamen. On the relationships between the composition of the Hymn to Apollo and the Delian festival, see Förstel 1979: 71-84, Miller 1985: 145 and Clay 1989: 47. An inscription testifies to the existence of a Homereion in Delos (ID 443, Bb 147) but the function and shape of this building are not clear. In his commentary on the mentioned inscription Durrbach 1929: 190 points out that the building may have been devoted to a cult of Homer. See also Bruneau 1970: 455 and Farnoux 2002: 101 for discussion.

316. πανήγυριν: the occasion of the performance is a πανήγυρις, a general meeting, of the Ionians. This word never appears to be used to describe a general meeting in archaic and classical times; it was instead used from the Hellenistic age onwards for other festivals (Bruneau 1970: 532). This word, together with the expression κοινὸς πολίτης (see 319n.) may be therefore a trace of the times of composition of our text. Although the word used to designate the meeting may be late, the setting of Homer's proto-performance of the Hymn to Apollo in a Panionian festival in Delos is traditional and goes back to the fifth century BC (see 315-21n.).

τὸν κεράτινον βωμόν: this is the altar of horns, one of the major cult objects in Delos. For archaeological studies and collection of literary and epigraphic evidence, see Bruneau 1970 and Bruneau and Fraisse 2002. This altar was the setting of sacrifices to Apollo and it was said to have been built by the god himself by fastening together several horns of goats (Call. Ap. 60-4; the Delian altar mentioned in Call. Del. 312 too is to be identified with the altar of horns: see Mineur 1984: 242). Plutarch informs us that the altar was reckoned to be one of the seven wonders of the ancient world (The Cleverness of Animals 983e) and that Theseus performed a dance called Crane around it (Thes. 21). No other source claims that the altar of horns was the setting of a performance of the Hymn to Apollo, but there is no reason to exclude that the text or its sources knew that the Hymn was actually performed there. In any case, because of its function, this monument works well as the site of the performance through which Homer seals his relationship with Apollo: the poet offers his hymn on the altar as if it was a sacrifice to the god, and Apollo will grant fame in exchange.

317. λέγει ὕμνον εἰς Ἀπόλλωνα: the Hymn to Apollo was attributed to Homer as early as Thucydides (3.104), and perhaps by Aristophanes too (see Richardson 2010: 98 for discussion of the reference to the Hymn as a Homeric work in Aristophanes' Birds 575). For a list of later authors who attributed the Hymn to Homer see Allen 1936: lxxvii-lxxviii). But a scholium to Pindar's Nemean 2 attributes it to Cynaethus, who probably performed the Hymn during the festival organised by Polycrates in Delos in 524-3 BC: on Cynaethus see Förstel 1979: 92-101, Burkert 1979, Janko 1982: 112-15, 200, 228-31, West 1975 and 2003: 11, Aloni 1989. The Homeric authorship of this text was mostly accepted and the Certamen does not need to mitigate this claim (contrast the case of the

Epigoni, at 260) or to support it with evidence (cf. the case of the Margites, at 15-17).

318. μνήσομαι οὐδὲ λάθωμαι Απόλλωνος ἑκάτοιο: as in the case of Thebais and Epigoni (255-8), the Certamen quotes the first verse of the work. The quotation is in this case especially appropriate to the context for its emphasis on the theme of memory.

319-20. οἱ μὲν Ἴωνες πολίτην αὐτὸν κοινὸν ... ἐποιήσαντο: Homer is made 'common citizen of the Ionians': the text had anticipated this outcome already during the contest, when Homer repeatedly got the approval of 'all the Greeks'. The title of 'common citizen' is not attested in confederations in the archaic, classical and Hellenistic ages; it may derive from Roman imperial institutions (Farnoux 2002: 102, with n. 30 for further bibliography). The author of the Certamen has either inserted this anecdote in a narrative that originally did not contain it, or updated its language.

320. Δήλιοι δὲ γράψαντες τὰ ἔπη εἰς λεύκωμα: writing is used in the text for the inscriptions on funeral monuments, statues, tripods and cups (213-14, 250-3, 265-70, 273-4, 309-14, 337-8) but the Hymn to Apollo is the only literary work to be transcribed in the narrative of the Certamen. This use of writing emphasises its importance as a means to perpetuate fame. While in other biographical narratives the act of transcription is not depicted positively, in the Certamen it legitimates the text and the Homeric authorship of it: see Beecroft 2010: 94. It is remarkable that the only literary work said to be inscribed is by Homer; transcription of Hesiod's Works and Days, which other sources do mention (Paus. 9.31.4), here does not feature. It is unclear whether this transcription (but also the performance) involved only the so called Delian part of the Hymn or the whole of it (cf. West 2003: 9) and there is no evidence that such transcription and dedication in Delos ever took place. However, as remarked already by Allen 1936: lxxv there is no reason to doubt that the story may have some historical basis. It is relevant that the text uses the word λεύκωμα (a wooden table covered with gypsum), which was indeed used in the island to release information to the public and to make offerings (Farnoux 2002: 102). Richardson 2010: 13 also suggests that the inscription of the Hymn might date from a relatively early period, as the sources used by the Certamen may date as far back as the sixth century (as he himself suggested in Richardson 1981). See also Clay 1989: 87-9 and 1997: 501, Förstel 1979: 92-101, Graziosi 2002: 120-1.

320-1. ἀνέθηκαν ἐν τῷ τῆς Ἀρτέμιδος ἱερῷ: Artemis' temple was older than Apollo's and this may explain the claim that the Λεύκωμα was dedicated to her temple, rather than to Apollo's; see Janko 1982: 257. Farnoux 2002 remarks that the exchanges of offerings between divinities were frequent at Delos: what is described here may also be one of such cases.

321-3. τῆς δὲ πανηγύρεως λυθείσης ... πρεσβύτης ὧν ἤδη: Homer goes to Ios and is hosted by Creophylus. Other sources too mention Creophylus as Homer's host, and claim that Homer gave him the poem Oechaliae Halosis in exchange (e.g. Strab. 14.1.18). In the Certamen no detail is given about Homer's visit to Creophylus, and Creophylus himself remains rather faceless. But the fact that he is the last person Homer meets, and especially that the poet dies while being his guest (cf. also Procl. Vit. Hom. 5, Tz. H. 13.652-9), leaves open the possibility that the Certamen draws on a source where Creophylus was not depicted positively. This source may be Alcidas: he is the source for the very next lines (Homer's death, see 323-8n.) and moreover it seems that a meeting between Homer and Creophylus right before Homer's death would suit Alcidas' time: in fifth-century Athens, Creophylus was known as someone who did not take good care of Homer in his lifetime (Pl. R. 600b6-c: οὐδ' αὖ, ἔφη, τοιοῦτον οὐδὲν λέγεται. ὁ γὰρ Κρεώφυλος, ὃ Σώκρατες, ἴσως, ὁ τοῦ Ὀμήρου ἑταῖρος, τοῦ ὀνόματος ἂν γελοιότερος ἔτι πρὸς παιδείαν φανείη, εἰ τὰ λεγόμενα περὶ Ὀμήρου ἀληθῆ. λέγεται γὰρ ὡς πολλή τις ἀμέλεια περὶ αὐτὸν ἦν ἐπ' αὐτοῦ ἐκείνου, ὅτε ἔζη). This may also explain why here, unlike in other sources, Creophylus is said to be from Ios, the predestined place of Homer's death (in Schol. Pl. R. 600b: Creophylus is from Chios; according to Call. Epigr. 6 from Samos; according to Tz. H. 13.652 from Arcadia). Claims such as Plato's and Alcidamas' may be seen as an Athenian response to the tradition according to which Sparta was the first Greek city to receive the Homeric poems precisely through Creophylus or his descendants, the Creophylei (on which see Burkert 1972), which was in conflict with the Pisistratides' claims (on Creophylus and the Spartan tradition, and its relationship with the Athenian one, see Graziosi 2002: 189-93 and 217-22). Although many sources give the name in the form Κρεώφυλος, the reading of L Κρεόφυλον does not need emendation (see apparatus). The form Κρεόφυλος too is testified in ancient sources (see e.g. Plu. Lyc. 4.4); it is transmitted also in some of the manuscript of Proclus, and this gives some authority to the reading of L.

323. πρεσβύτης ὢν ἤδη: claiming that Homer has become old by this time serves as a justification for his failure to solve the riddle proposed by the fisher boys and confirms that a long time has passed since he lost the contest to Hesiod.

323-38. ἐπὶ δὲ τῆς θαλάσσης ... θεῖον Ὅμηρον: according to the biographical tradition, Homer dies after failing to solve the riddle of the fisher boys (see 327-8). The peculiarity of the Certamen's account is that the inability to solve the riddle is not the cause of the poet's death, but only seems to work as a terminus post quem for the realisation of the oracle. Indeed Homer dies accidentally after realising that the meeting meant that his death was approaching. The death of Homer is presented quite differently from Hesiod's. Hesiod dies a violent death as a punishment for an alleged crime, while Homer dies accidentally. Unlike Hesiod, Homer is never said to misunderstand the oracle, he only seems to forget it. Homer accepts his destiny and even composes his own epitaph. The source for this part of the text must be Alcidamas. The most compelling evidence is P.Mich. inv. 2754 (see pp. 70-80), in which an account of the death of Homer almost identical to this is followed by Alcidamas' name. Alcidamas in turn uses material that predates him. The episode of the riddle of the lice was known already to Heraclitus who seems to refer to it as to a traditional anecdote (fr. 56 D.-K.: ἐξηπάτηνται, φησίν, οἱ ἄνθρωποι πρὸς τὴν γνῶσιν τῶν φανερῶν παραπλησίως Ὀμήρῳ, ὃς ἐγένετο τῶν Ἑλλήνων σοφώτερος πάντων. ἐκεῖνόν τε γὰρ παῖδες φθειράς κατακτείνοντες ἐξηπάτησαν εἰπόντες· ὅσα εἶδομεν καὶ ἐλάβομεν, ταῦτα ἀπολείπομεν, ὅσα δὲ οὔτε εἶδομεν οὔτ' ἐλάβομεν, ταῦτα φέρομεν). Although Heraclitus does not make an explicit connection between this episode and the poet's death, it is likely that such a connection was established early. See also Kirk 1950: 160 n. 1, Janko 2011: 529.

323-6. ἐπὶ δὲ τῆς θαλάσσης ... ἢ ῥ' ἔχομέν τι; Homer approaches the fisher boys and asks if they have caught anything. This episode is also told in other sources: Procl. Vit. Hom. 5; Ps.-Plut. Vit. Hom. 1.4; Anon. Vita Hom. 2.3; Anon. Vita Hom. 3.5; Tz. H. 13.660; id. Exeg. in Il. 37.22. In Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 36 it is the boys who approach Homer and challenge him. The fact that Homer's opponents are παῖδες has been seen as a response to the assumed mental inferiority of the young men to their elders in the Homeric poems (Levine 2002: 147-50) and, more generally, the 'learned man surpassed by the ignorant' is a traditional feature of several folk-stories (Thompson 1957, 5: 13-14, Levine 2002: 144 n.12). The verse uttered by Homer is transmitted in several sources: see apparatus. Ps.-Plu. reports the question in prose and Tzetzes in H. 13.660 in a different metre. The reason why Homer addresses the boys as 'men from Arcadia' seems to remain obscure (see also Kivilo 2010b: 93 n. 65), as it is the presence of the variant ἀλιήτορες for θηρήτορες in some versions of the verse (see apparatus). Generally, it must be relevant that Arcadia is land-locked, and people from there cannot be fishers, but hunters. This was surely felt as problematic already in late antiquity, as Tzetzes in both of his accounts of the episode seems to try and harmonise the tradition by making Ios a place in Arcadia.

327-8. εἰπόντων δὲ ἐκείνων ... φερόμεσθα: the text of the riddle is transmitted in all the Homeric biographies, with some minor variations (see apparatus). The text of the riddle is also partly visible on the wall of the so called Casa degli Epigrammi in Pompei, as a caption for a fresco that represents two boys proposing the riddle to Homer: see Gigante 1979: 50-3 and most recently Bergmann 2007: 71-6. As Hess 1960: 34 points out, a death following a riddle is a traditional motif: the most famous example are the stories of Chalcas and Mopsus (in Strab. 14.1.27) and of Oedipus and the Sphinx. The riddle itself is shaped according to a model (contradiction) found in other cultures too: De Vries 1928: 132, Thompson 1957: 427. Scholars have tried to unfold possible hidden meanings of the riddle. A key word is ἔλομεν, which can be translated as ‘grasped’, ‘understood’: Bergmann 2007: 75-6 suggests that the real solution of the riddle is the riddle itself, which brings about the fulfilment of the oracle: what the boys could not grasp is the riddle, which they are carrying with themselves and taking to Homer, whose destiny is thereby accomplished; Kahane 2005: 20-2 suggests that what has not been grasped, the unknown, is death, which is also signified by the very solution of the riddle, the lice (phtheires bring about the disintegration of the flesh) – but for Homer death represents the start of the tradition, his ‘immortality’.

329-32. οὐ νοήσας τὸ λεχθὲν ... ἐν τοῖς ἱματίοις φέρειν: without hesitation Homer asks for the solution of the riddle: he does not feel his reputation for wisdom to be in danger, and in fact here Homer seems to be more unconcerned with solving the riddle than in any other version of the episode. The solution is given by the fisher boys also in Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 37; in other cases the solution is given by the text (Ps.-Plut. Vit. Hom. 1.4; Procl. Vit. Hom. 5; Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.5) or is not given at all, which probably means that it was very widely known (Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.6; Anon. Vit. Hom. 2.3).

332-3. ἀναμνησθεῖς δὲ τοῦ μαντείου ... αὐτοῦ ἐπίγραμμα: unlike Hesiod, Homer never misunderstood the oracle predicting his death. When he received it, at a young age before the contest, he carefully avoided Ios (61-2); when, as an old man, Homer eventually goes there and realises that the prophecy has been fulfilled, he accepts his destiny and writes his funeral epigram – which is, as Kahane 2005: 5 puts it, ‘a symbolic form of suicide’. The view that the epigram was composed by Homer himself is shared also by Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.5. Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 37 seems to respond to this tradition when the text specifies that the epigram was composed by the Ietans, and not, as some say, by Homer (καὶ τὸ ἐλεγείον τόδε ἐπέγραψαν Ἴηται ὕστερον χρόνῳ πολλῷ ... οὐδὲ Ὅμηρου ἐστίν). Other sources too attribute it to the Ietans (Ps.-Plut. Vit. Hom. 1.4), others report it anonymously (Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.6; Anon. Vit. Hom. 2.3). Hesiod’s epitaph, though uttered in the first person (250-3), was never attributed to the poet himself.

334-5. ἀναχωρῶν δὲ ἐκεῖθεν ... ὥς φασι τελευτᾷ: unlike other texts, the Certamen seems to enact strategies to avoid a direct connection between Homer’s inability to solve the riddle and his death, so as not to call into question Homer’s wisdom. According to Ps.-Plut. Vit. Hom. 1.4 Homer dies because, ‘unable to work this out, he became distraught and died’ (ὅπερ οὐ δυνηθεὶς συμβαλεῖν Ὅμηρος διὰ τὴν ἀθυμίαν ἐτελεύτησε); in Anon. Vit. Hom. 1.6 he ‘found himself helpless’ because he was unable to solve the riddle (ἀμηχανία περιπεσόντα, ἐπειδὴπερ τῶν παίδων τῶν ἀλίων οὐχ οἷός τε ἐγένετο αἰνιγμα λῦσαι); in Anon. Vit. Hom. 2.3 he ‘starved himself to death in chagrin at not solving the problem’ (διὰ λύπην ἀποκαρτερήσαντα τελευτῆσαι διὰ τὸ μὴ λῦσαι τὸ ζήτημα); in Anon. Vit. Hom. 3.5 ‘not understanding the utterance, he died from depression’ (οὐ νοήσας δὲ τὸ λεγόμενον ἀπὸ θλίψεως ἐτελεύτησεν). That detaching Homer’s failure in solving the riddle from his death is a way to save Homer’s reputation is also confirmed by Ps.-Hdt. Vit. Hom. 36: after claiming that Homer died of illness, this text adds ‘not from his failure to interpret the boys’ saying, as some suppose, but from his indisposition’ (ἐκ δὲ τῆς ἀσθενείας ταύτης συνέβη τὸν Ὅμηρον τελευτῆσαι ἐν Ἴῳ, οὐ παρὰ τὸ μὴ γινῶναι τὸ παρὰ τῶν παίδων ῥηθέν, ὥς οἰονταί τινες, ἀλλὰ τῇ μαλακίῃ). An account similar to that of the Certamen is told by Procl. Vit. Hom. 5 and Tz. H. 13.664-5; but both Proclus and Tzetzes mix it with the more widespread tradition according to which the poet dies because he cannot solve the riddle (Proclus: οὕτω δ' ἐκεῖνον ἀθυμήσαντα σύννου ἀπιέναι, τοῦ χρημοῦ ἔννοϊαν λαμβάνοντα, καὶ οὕτως ὀλισθόντα περιπταῖσαι λίθῳ, καὶ τριταῖον τελευτῆσαι. Tzetzes: ὑπέστρεφε λυπούμενος ὡς μὴ νοήσας τοῦτο. / πηλοῦ δ' ὄντος ὠλίσθησε καὶ κεκρουκῶς εἰς πέτραν / κλᾶται πλευρὰν τὴν δεξιὰν καὶ τελευτᾷ τριταῖος).

335. καὶ ἐτάφη ἐν Ἴῳ: while Homer's birthplace was a disputed matter, the place of his death and burial is universally identified in Ios. Along with Homer's biographies, the tradition of Homer's tomb on Ios is testified also by Pausanias (10.24.2) and Strabo (10.5.1). The alleged site of Homer's tomb is a tourist attraction even today.

336-8. ἔστι δὲ τὸ ἐπίγραμμα τόδε ... θεῖον Ὅμηρον: the text of Homer's funeral epigram is transmitted by virtually all the biographies of Homer and also in anthologies of epigrams with minimal textual variations (see apparatus). Two gravestones with Homer's epitaph have been found in Ios: IG 12.5.1.1<sup>1</sup> and 1<sup>4</sup>; they may have been displayed in front of Homer's tomb. A similar text has also been found in funeral inscriptions for other people: IG 12.5.1.678 and IG 14.763 l. 2. There were other funeral epigrams for Homer: see AP 7.1-7. In the Certamen the fact that it is situated at the end of the narration of Homer's death creates a structural parallel with the episode of Hesiod's death, closed by the epitaph of the poet (250-3). The overall effect is a final emphasis on Homer's divinity.

Bibliography

Allen, J. (2006). Hostages and Hostage-Taking in the Roman Empire. Oxford.

Allen, T. W., ed. (1912). Homeri Opera Tomus V: Hymnos Cyclum Fragmenta Margiten Batrachomyomachian Vitas Continens. Oxford.

Allen, T. W. (1924). Homer. The Origins and the Transmission. Oxford.

Allen, T. W., et al., eds. (1936 (2 ed)). The Homeric Hymns. Oxford.

Aloni, A. (1989). L'aedo e i Tiranni: Ricerche sull'Inno Omerico a Apollo. Rome.

Aly, W. (1914). "1. Inv. N. 12. Aus einem Schulbuche". Mitteilungen aus der Freiburger Papyrussammlung, I. Literarische Stücke. Heidelberg 7-22.

Anderson, G. (1986). Philostratus: Biography and Belles Lettres in the Third Century A.D. London.

Arnim, v., I. (1905). Stoicorum Veterum Fragmenta. Collegit Ioannes ab Arnim. Volumen I. Zeno et Zenoni Discipuli. Stuttgart.

Arnott, W. G. (1999). "Notes on some comic papyri." ZPE 126: 77-80.

Arnott, W. G., ed. (2000). Menander. Volume III, Samia, Sikyonioi, Synaristosai, Phasma, Unidentified and excluded papyri. Cambridge (MA).

Avalle, S., ed. (1960). Peire Vidal, Poesie. Milan.

Avezzù, G., ed. (1982). Alcidamante. Orazioni e frammenti. Rome.

Babbitt, F. C., ed. (1928). Plutarch's Moralia II. Cambridge (MA).

Bakker, E. J. (1990). "Homeric Discourse and Enjambement: A Cognitive Approach." TAPA 120: 1-21.

Bandini, A. M. (1768). Catalogus codicum Graecorum Bibliothecae Laurentianae varia continens Opera Graecorum Patrum. Florence.

Barnes, J., Ed. (1711). Ilias et Odyssea. Accedunt Opera Minora. Cambridge.

Bassino, P. (2012). "Certamen Homeri et Hesiodi: nuovi spunti per una riconsiderazione delle testimonianze papiracee." ZPE 180: 38-42.

- Bausi, F. (1996). Silvae. Angelo Poliziano; a cura di Francesco Bausi. Firenze.
- Beaulieu, M. (2004). "L'héroïsation du poète Hésiode en Grèce ancienne." Kernos 17: 103-17.
- Beecroft, A. (2010). Authorship and Cultural Identity in Early Greece and China: Patterns of Literary Circulation. Cambridge.
- Beecroft, A. (2011). "Blindness and literacy in the Lives of Homer." CQ 61: 1-18.
- Berenson Maclean, J. K. and E. Bradshaw Aitken (2001). Flavius Philostratus: Heroikos. Atlanta.
- Bergmann, B. (2007). "A painted garland: weaving words and images in the House of the Epigrams in Pompeii". Art and Inscriptions in the Ancient World Z. Newby and R. E. Leader-Newby, eds. Cambridge: 60-101.
- Bernabé, A. (1984). "¿Mas de una Ilias Parva?" Estudios clásicos 26(1): 141-50.
- Bernabé, A., Ed. (1987). Poetae Epici Graeci: Testimonia et Fragmenta. Leipzig.
- Bernhardy, G. (1822). Eratosthenica. Berlin.
- Bertelli, L., ed. "Euagon of Samos (535)". Brill's New Jacoby, Brill Online.
- Biles, Z. P. (2011). Aristophanes and the Poetics of Competition. Cambridge.
- Boehrer, R. and E. Boehrer (1939). Homer: Bildnisse und Nachweise. Breslau.
- Boissonade, J. F., ed. (1824). Hesiodus. Paris.
- Bompaire, J., ed. (1998). Lucien. Oeuvres: Opuscles 11-20 Paris.
- Bonfante, G. (1968). "Il nome di Omero." PP 23: 360-1.
- Boutière, J. and A.-H. Schutz, eds. (1950 (2nd ed. 1964)). Biographies des Troubadours. Paris.
- Bowie, E. L. (2010). "Historical narrative in archaic and classical Greek elegy. Epic and History". D. Konstan and K. A. Raaflaub, eds. Oxford: 145-64.
- Boys-Stones, G. (2010). "Hesiod and Plato's history of philosophy". Plato and Hesiod. J. H. Haubold and G. Boys-Stones, eds. Oxford: 31-51.

Breilich, A. (1958). Gli Eroi Greci. Rome.

Breilich, A. (1961). Guerre, Agoni e Culti nella Grecia Arcaica. Bonn.

Brink, C. O. (1972). "Ennius and the Hellenistic worship of Homer". AJPh 93: 547-67.

Brodersen, K. (2010). "Mannhafte Frauen bei Polyainos und beim Anonymus de mulieribus". Polyainos. Neue Studien. Polyaeus. New Studies. Berlin: 149-59.

Broggiato, M., ed. (2001). Cratete di Mallo: I frammenti. Edizione, introduzione e note. La Spezia.

Bruneau, P. (1970). Recherches sur les cultes de Délos à l'époque hellénistique et à l'époque impériale. Paris.

Bruneau, P. and P. Fraisse (2002). Le Monument à abside et la question de l'autel de cornes. Athens.

Bryce, T. R. (2006). The Trojans and their Neighbours. London.

Burgess, J. (2001). The Tradition of the Trojan War in Homer and the Epic Cycle. Baltimore.

Burkert, W. (1972). "Die Leistung eines Kreophylos. Kreophyler, Homeriden und die archaische Heraklesepeik." MH 29(2): 74-85.

Burkert, W. (1979). "Kynaithos, Polycrates, and the Homeric Hymn to Apollo". Arktouros: Hellenic studies presented to B. M. W. Knox on the occasion of his 65th birthday. G. W. Bowersock, W. Burkert and M. C. J. Putnam, eds. Berlin.

Burkert, W. (1987). "The making of Homer in the sixth century BC: rhapsodes versus Stesichorus". Papers on the Amasis Painter and his World. D. v. Bothmer, ed. Malibu: 43-62.

Busse, A. (1909). "Der Agon zwischen Homer und Hesiod." RhM 64: 108-19.

Calame, C. (1996). "Montagne des Muses et Mouseia: la consecration des Travaux et l'héroisation d'Hésiode". La Montagne des Muses. A. Hurst and A. Schachter, eds. Genève: 43-56.

- Cameron, A. (2004). Greek Mythography in the Roman World. Oxford.
- Campbell, D. A. (1983). The golden lyre: the themes of the Greek lyric poets. London.
- Canart, P. (2002). "Il Bandini e la catalogazione dei manoscritti greci. Osservazioni di un catalogatore". Un erudito del Settecento: Angelo Maria Bandini. R. Pintaudi, ed. Messina: 37-42.
- Cavallo, G. (2000). "Scritture informali, cambio grafico e pratiche librerie a Bisanzio tra i secoli XI e XII". I Manoscritti Greci tra Riflessione e Dibattito, Atti del V Colloquio Internazionale di Paleografia Greca (Cremona, 4-10 ottobre 1998). G. Prato, ed. Florence: 219-38.
- Cavallo, G. and H. Maehler (2008). Hellenistic Bookhands. Berlin.
- Cesaretti, P. (1991). Allegoristi Di Omero a Bisanzio: Ricerche Ermeneutiche (XI-XII Secolo). Milan.
- Cingano, E. (1985). "Clistene di Sicione, Erodoto e i poemi del ciclo tebano." QUCC 49: 31-40.
- Clark, M. (1997). Out of Line. Homeric Composition Beyond the Hexameter. Lanham.
- Clay, D. (2004). Archilochos Heros. The Cult of Poets in the Greek Polis. Cambridge (MA).
- Clay, J. S. (2003). Hesiod's Cosmos. Cambridge.
- Clay, J. S. (2008-2009). "Sarpédon: «Aristos Heroon»." Gaia 12: 15-27.
- Clay, J. S. (2011). Homer's Trojan Theater: Space, Vision, and Memory in the Iliad. Cambridge.
- Cohoon, J. W., ed. (1932). Dio Chrysostom. Translated by J.W. Cohoon. Cambridge (MA).
- Colbeau, M.-A. (2005). Raconter la vie d'Homère dans l'Antiquité. Thèse soutenue à l'Université de Lille 3, le 1er décembre 2005.
- Collins, D. (2004). Master of the Game: Competition and Performance in Greek Poetry. Harvard.
- Colonna, A. (1953). "I Prolegomeni ad Esiodo e la Vita Esiodea di G. Tzetzes."

BPEC 2: 27-39.

Colonna, A., ed. (1959). Opera et dies / Hesiodi; recensuit Aristides Colonna. Milan.

Compton-Engle, G. L. (1999). "Aristophanes Peace 1265-1304: food, poetry, and the comic genre." CPh 94(3): 324-9.

Cook, A. B. (1914). Zeus: A Study in Ancient Religion, vol. 1. Cambridge.

Cook, A. B. (1925). Zeus: A Study in Ancient Religion, vol. 2.2. Cambridge.

Dain, A. (1950). "Un manuscrit de Polyen, le Scorialensis T.i.12 " Emerita 18: 425-39.

Daneloni, A. (2005). "Due libri postillati dal giovane Poliziano." Studi medievali e umanistici 3: 165-212.

Daneloni, A. and L. Martinelli (1994). "Angelus Politianus: manoscritti e edizioni". Pico, Poliziano e l'Umanesimo di fine Quattrocento: Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana 4 novembre - 31 dicembre 1994. P. Viti, ed. Florence: 305-43.

Davies, M., ed. (1988). Epicorum Graecorum Fragmenta. Göttingen.

Davies, M. (1989). The Greek Epic Cycle. Bristol.

Davies, M. (1989b). "Kinkel redivivus (review of Bernabé 1987)." CR 103: 4-9.

de Lannoy, L. (1997). "Le problème des Philostrate (État de la question)" ANRW 34(3): 2362-449.

De Martino, F. (1982). Omero Quotidiano. Vite di Omero. Venosa.

De Vries, J. (1928). Die Märchen von klugen Rätsellösern Helsinki.

De Vries, G. J. (1969). A Commentary on the Phaedrus of Plato. Amsterdam.

Debiasi, A. (2001). "Variazioni sul nome di Omero." Hesperia. Studi sulla grecità di occidente. 14: 10-35.

Debiasi, A. (2010). "Orcomeno, Ascra e l'epopea regionale minore". Tra Panellenismo e tradizioni locali: generi poetici e storiografia. E. Cingano. Alessandria: 255-98.

Debiasi, A. (2012). "Homer agonistes in Chalcis". Homeric Contexts: Neoanalysis And The Interpretation Of Oral Poetry F. Montanari, A. Rengakos and C. Tsagalis. Berlin: 471-500.

Defradas, J., et al., Eds. (1985). Plutarque. Oeuvres Morales II. Paris.

Deroy, L. (1972). "Le nom d'Homère." AC 41: 427-39.

Desmed, R. (1974). "La découverte et la première édition de la seconde centurie des "Miscellanea" de Politien." Scriptorium 28: 314-19.

Detienne, M. (1990). Les Maîtres de vérité dans la Grèce archaïque. Paris.

Di Benedetto, V. (1969). "Aristophanes, Pax 1282-1283 e il certamen tra Omero e Esiodo." RAL 24: 161-5.

Dodds, E. R. (1952). "The Alcidamas-Papyrus Again." CQ 2: 187-8.

Durante, M. (1957). "Il nome di Omero." Rendiconti dell'Accademia Nazionale dei Lincei, Classe di scienze morali, storiche e filologiche 12: 94-111.

Edwards, G. (1971). The Language of Hesiod in its Traditional Context. Oxford.

Elmer, D. (2013). The Poetics of Consent: Collective Decision Making and the Iliad. Baltimore.

Erbse, H. (1996). "Homer und Hesiod in Chalkis." RhM 139: 308-15.

Ercolani, A., Ed. (2010). Esiodo, Opere e Giorni. Rome.

Erskine, A. (2001). Troy Between Greece and Rome: Local Tradition and Imperial Power. Oxford.

Esposito Vulgo Gigante, G. (1996). Vite di Omero. Naples.

Evelyn White, H. G., ed. (1914). Hesiod, The Homeric Hymns, and Homerica. Cambridge (MA).

Farnoux, A. (2002). "Homère à Délos." Ktema 27: 97-104.

Fehling, D. (1979). "Zwei Lehrstücke über Pseudo-Nachrichten (Homeriden, Lelantischer Krieg)." RhM 122: 193-210.

Ferrante, D., Ed. (1957). Proclo, Crestomazia: introduzione, testo, traduzione e commento degli estratti relativi ai generi letterari, luoghi paralleli: testo e traduzione, ciclo e vita di Omero: testo e traduzione. Naples.

Foley, J. M. (1999). Homer's Traditional Art. University Park: Pennsylvania State.

Fontenrose, J. E. (1978). The Delphic Oracle: Its Responses and Operations, with a Catalog of Responses. Berkeley.

Ford, A. (1992). Homer: the Poetry of the Past. Ithaca.

Ford, A. (1997). "The Inland Ship: Problems in the Performance and Reception of Early Greek Epic". Written Voices, Spoken Signs: Tradition, Performance, and the Epic Text. E. Bakker and A. Kahane, eds. Cambridge (MA).

Ford, A. (2002). The Origins of Criticism: Literary Culture and Poetic Theory in Classical Greece. Princeton.

Förstel, K. (1979). Untersuchungen zum homerischen Apollonhymnos. Bochum.

Fowler, R. L. (2000). Early Greek Mythography: Volume 1: Text and Introduction. Oxford.

Fraser, P. M. (1972). Ptolemaic Alexandria. Vol. 2. Oxford.

Friedel, O. (1878-9). "Die Sage vom Tode Hesiods." Jahrbücher für classische Philologie suppl. 10: 235-78.

Fritz, v., K. and E. Kapp (1950). Constitution of Athens and related texts / Translated with an introd. and notes by Kurt von Fritz and Ernst Kapp. New York.

Fryde, E. B. (1983). Humanism and Renaissance Historiography. London.

Fryde, E. B. (1996). Greek manuscripts in the private library of the Medici: 1469-1510. 2. Aberystwyth.

Gaisford, T., Ed. (1823). Poetae minores Graeci: Scholia ad Hesiodum. Oxford.

Gallavotti, C. (1929). "Genesi e tradizione letteraria dell'Agone tra Omero ed Esiodo." RFIC 7: 31-59.

Gentile, S. (1997). "Pico filologo." Giovanni Pico della Mirandola: convegno internazionale di studi nel cinquecentesimo anniversario della morte (1494-1994):

Mirandola, 4-8 ottobre 1994. G. C. Garfagnini. Florence: 465-90.

Georgiadou, A. and D. H. J. Larmour (1998). Lucian's Science Fiction Novel True Histories. Leiden.

Gera, D. L. (1997). Warrior Women: The Anonymous Tractatus De Mulieribus. Leiden.

Giannini, A., Ed. (1965). Paradoxographicorum Graecorum Fragmenta. Milan.

Gigante, M. (1979). Civiltà delle Forme Letterarie nella Antica Pompei. Pompei.

Goettling, K., Ed. (1843). Hesiodi Carmina. Gotha.

Gostoli, A., Ed. (2007). Margite. Pisa-Rome.

Graziosi, B. (2001). "Competition in Wisdom. Homer, Tragedy and Beyond. Essays in Honour of P.E. Easterling". F. Budelmann and P. Michelakis. London: 57-74.

Graziosi, B. (2002). Inventing Homer: The Early Reception of Epic. Cambridge.

Graziosi, B. and J. Haubold, eds. (2010). Homer: Iliad Book VI. Cambridge.

Gutzwiller, K. (2010). "Heroic epitaphs of the classical age: the Aristotelian Peplos and beyond." Archaic and Classical Greek Epigram. M. Baumbach, A. Petrovic and I. Petrovic, eds. Cambridge: 219-49.

Hall, E. (1988). "When did the Trojans turn into Phrygians? Alcaeus 42.15." ZPE 73: 15-18.

Hall, E. (1989). Inventing the Barbarian: Greek Self-Definition Through Tragedy. Oxford.

Hanink, J. (2008). "Literary Politics and the Euripidean Vita." CCJ 54: 115-35.

Harsting, P. (2001). "More Evidence of Menander Rhetor on the Wedding Speech: Angelo Poliziano's Transcription." Cahiers de l'Institut du Moyen-Age grec et latin 72: 11-34.

Haubold, J. H. (2000). Homer's people. Epic Poetry and Social Formation. Cambridge.

Heath, M. (1998). "Was Homer a Roman?" Papers of the Leeds International Latin

Seminar 10: 23-56.

Heeren, A. H. L. (1789). "Tractatus anonymi de mulieribus quae bello claruerunt." Bibliothek der Alten Literatur und Kunst 6: 3-24.

Heldmann, K. (1982). Die Niederlage Homers im Dichterwettstreit mit Hesiod. Göttingen.

Hermann, G.. Ed. (1835). Opuscula. Vol. 6. Leipzig.

Hess, K. (1960). Der Agon zwischen Homer und Hesiod, seine Entstehung und kulturgeschichtliche Stellung. Winterthur.

Heubeck, A. H. and A. Hoekstra (1989). A Commentary on Homer's Odyssey: Volume II: Books IX-XVI. Oxford.

Higbie, C. (1990). Measure and Music: Enjambment and Sentence Structure in the Iliad. Oxford.

Hiller, E. (1872). Eratosthenis Carminum Reliquiae. Leipzig.

Hillgruber, M. (1990). "Zur Zeitbestimmung der Chrestomathie des Proklos." RhM 133: 397-404.

Hillgruber, M. (1994). Die pseudoplutarchische Schrift De Homero Teil 1: Einleitung und Kommentar zu den Kapiteln 1-73. Stuttgart - Leipzig.

Hillgruber, M. (1999). Die pseudoplutarchische Schrift De Homero. Teil 2. Kommentar zu den Kapiteln 74-218. Stuttgart - Leipzig.

Hornblower, S. (1991). A Commentary on Thucydides, vol. 1: books 1-3. Oxford.

Hunter, R. (2006). The Shadow of Callimachus. Studies in the Reception of Hellenistic Poetry at Rome. Cambridge.

Hunter, R. (2009). Hesiod's Style: Towards an Ancient Analysis. Montanari et al. (2009). Leiden: 253-69.

Hunter, R. and I. Rutherford, eds. (2009). Wandering Poets in Ancient Greek Culture: Travel, Locality and Pan-Hellenism. Cambridge.

Huxley, G. (1969). "Choirilos of Samos." GRBS 10: 12-29.

- Jakoby, F. (1933). "Homerisches I: Der Bios und die Person." Hermes 68: 1-50.
- Janko, R. (1982). Homer, Hesiod, and the Hymns: Diachronic Development in Epic Diction. Cambridge.
- Janko, R. (1992). The Iliad: A Commentary: Volume 4 books 13-16. Cambridge.
- Janko, R., Ed. (2011). Philodemus On Poems Book 3-4 with the Fragments of Aristotle On Poets. Oxford.
- Jellamo, A. (2005). Il cammino di Dike. L'idea di giustizia da Omero a Eschilo. Rome.
- Jones, C. P. (1986). Culture and Society in Lucian. Cambridge (MA).
- Kahane, A. (2005). Diachronic Dialogues. Authority and Continuity in Homer and Homeric Tradition. Lanham.
- Kaiser, E. (1964). "Odyssee-Szenen als Topoi." MH 21(4): 197-224.
- Kegel, W. (1962). Simonides. Groningen.
- Kim, L. (2010). Homer between History and Fiction in Imperial Greek Literature. Cambridge.
- Kindstrand, J. F., ed. (1990). De Homero. Leipzig, B.G. Teubner.
- Kirchhoff, A. (1892). Der Roman eines Sophisten. Berlin.
- Kirk, G. S. (1950). "The Michigan Alcidas-Papyrus; Heraclitus fr. 56D; the riddle of the lice." CQ 44: 149-67.
- Kirk, G. S. (1966). "Studies in some technical aspects of Homeric style." YCS 20: 75-152.
- Kirk, G. S. (1985). The Iliad: A Commentary: Volume 1 books 1-4. Cambridge.
- Kirk, G. S. (1990). The Iliad: A Commentary: Volume 2 books 5-8. Cambridge.
- Kivilo, M. (2000). "Certamen." Studia Humaniora Tartuensia 1: 1-5.
- Kivilo, M. (2010). Early Greek Poets' Lives: The Shaping of the Tradition. Leiden.
- Kivilo, M. (2010b). "The early biographical tradition on Homer." Identities and

Societies in the Ancient East-Mediterranean Regions: Comparative Approaches T. Kämmerer, P. Funke, M. Kōiv and A. Lill. Münster, eds.: 85-104.

Koechly, H. (1857). Opuscula Academica I. Leipzig.

Kōiv, M. (2011). "A note on the dating of Hesiod." CQ 61(2): 355-77.

Kokolakis, M. (1995). "Zeus' tomb: an object of pride and reproach." Kernos 8: 123-38.

Koniaris, G. L. (1971). "Michigan Papyrus 2754 and the Certamen." HSPH 75: 107-29.

Koning, H. H. (2010). Hesiod, the Other Poet: Ancient Reception of a Cultural Icon. Leiden.

Körte, A. (1927). "Alkidamas Περί Ὀμήρου." APF 8: 261-5.

Kuisma, O. (1996). Proclus' Defence of Homer. Helsinki.

Lamberton, R. (1986). Homer the Theologian: Neoplatonist Allegorical Reading and the Growth of the Epic Tradition. Berkeley.

Lamberton, R. (1988). "Plutarch, Hesiod, and the Mouseia of Thespiiai." ICS 13(2): 491-504.

Lanata, G. (1963). Poetica preplatonica. Florence.

Landi, C. (1895). "Opuscula de fontibus mirabilibus, de Nilo etc. ex cod. Laur. 56,1 descripta." Studi italiani di filologia classica 3: 531-48.

Latacz, J. (1996). Homer, His Art and His World. Ann Arbor.

Lefkowitz, M. (1981 (2nd ed. 2012)). The Lives of the Greek Poets. London.

Lehrs, K. (1875). Über Wahrheit und Dichtung in der griechischen Literaturgeschichte. Populäre Aufsätze aus dem Alterthum. Leipzig.

Leo, F. (1901). Die griechisch-römische Biographie nach ihrer litterarischen Form. Leipzig.

Levine, D. (2002). "Poetic Justice: Homer's Death in the Ancient Biographical Tradition." CJ 98(2): 141-160.

- Livingstone, N. and G. Nisbet (2010). Epigram. Cambridge.
- Lloyd-Jones, P. H., et al. (1983). Supplementum Hellenisticum: Supplement, De Gruyter.
- Longo, A. (1995). "Sull'attribuzione della Crestomazia a Proclo neoplatonico " SIFC 13: 109-24.
- Maass, E. (1911). "Die Person Homers." Neue Jahrbücher für das klassische Altertum 27: 539-50.
- Mahaffy, J. P. (1891). The Flinders Petrie Papyri with Transcriptions, Commentaries and Index. Dublin.
- Maisano, R. (1995). Discorsi di Temistio. Turin.
- Mandilaras, B. (1990). "A New Papyrus Fragment of the Certamen Homeri et Hesiodi." Platon 42: 45-51.
- Mandilaras, B. (1992). A New Papyrus Fragment of the Certamen Homeri et Hesiodi (reprinted). Papiri letterari greci e latini (Papyrologica Lupiensia 1). M. Capasso. Lecce 54-62.
- Manieri, A. (2009). Agoni poetico-musicali nella Grecia antica vol. 1 (Beozia). Pisa-Roma.
- Mansuelli, G. A. (1963). "Omero." Enciclopedia dell'arte antica, classica e orientale, vol. 5. Rome.
- Markwald, G. (1986). Die homerische Epigramme: sprachliche und inhaltliche Untersuchungen. Meisenheim.
- Martino, F. de (1984). Omero Quotidiano: Vite di Omero. Venosa.
- Marx, F. (1925). "Die Überlieferung über die Persönlichkeit Homers." RhM 74: 395-431.
- Marzillo, P., ed. (2010). Der Kommentar des Proklos zu Hesiods „Werken und Tagen“. Tübingen.
- Mason, H. (1974). Greek Terms for Roman Institutions. Toronto.

- Matteuzzi, M. (2000-2002). "A proposito di Omero "babilonese" (Lucian. V.H. II 20)." Sandalion 23-25: 49-51.
- McLeod, W. (1985). "The 'Epic Canon' of the Borgia Table: Hellenistic Lore or Roman Fraud?" TAPhA 115: 153-65.
- Meineke, A. (1843). Analecta Alexandrina. Berlin.
- Menci, G. (2012). "Un epigramma del Certamen Homeri et Hesiodi (309-312 Allen) in P.Duk. inv. 665." ZPE 180: 43-7.
- Merkelbach, R. and L. West, eds. (1967). Fragmenta Hesiodica. Oxford.
- Meyer, E. (1892). "Homerische Parerga: der Wettkampf Homers und Hesiods." Hermes 27: 377-80.
- Miller, A. M. (1985). From Delos to Delphi: A Literary Study of the Homeric Hymn to Apollo. Leiden.
- Milne, H. J. M. (1927). Catalogue of the Literary Papyri in the British Museum. London.
- Milne, M. J. (1924). A Study in Alcidamas and his Relation to Contemporary Sophists. Bryn Mawr.
- Mineur, W. H., ed. (1984). Callimachus. Hymn to Delos. Leiden.
- Möllendorff, P. v. (2000). Auf der Suche nach der verlogenen Wahrheit. Lukians Wahre Geschichten. Tübingen.
- Momigliano, A. D. (1993). Development of Greek Biography, Expanded Edition. Harvard.
- Montanari, F., et al., eds. (2009). Brill's Companion to Hesiod. Leiden.
- Morgan, K. A. (2000). Myth and Philosophy from the Presocratics to Plato. Cambridge.
- Muir, J. V., ed. (2001). Alcidamas. The works and fragments. Bristol.
- Munn, M. H. (2006). The Mother of the Gods, Athens, and the tyranny of Asia: a study of sovereignty in ancient religion. Berkeley.

Nagy, G. (1979). The best of the Achaeans: concepts of the hero in Archaic Greek poetry. Baltimore.

Nagy, G. (1982). Hesiod. Ancient Greek Authors. T. J. Luce. New York.

Nagy, G. (1983). On the death of Sarpedon. Approaches to Homer C. A. Rubino and C. W. Shelmerdine. Austin: 189-217.

Nagy, G. (2004). "L'aède épique en auteur: la tradition des Vies d'Homère." Identités d'auteur dans l'Antiquité et la tradition européenne. C. Calame and R. Chartier, eds. Grenoble: 41-67.

Nagy, G. (2006). "Homer's Name Revisited." La langue poétique indo-européenne; Actes du Colloque de travail de la Société des Études Indo-Européennes. Paris, 22-24 octobre 2003. G.-J. Pinault and D. Petit, eds. Leuven – Paris : 317-30.

Nagy, G. (2009). "Hesiod and the Ancient Biographical Traditions." Montanari et al. (2009): 271-311.

Nagy, G. (2010). Homer the Preclassic. Berkeley.

Nesselrath, H.-G. (2002). "Homerphilologie auf der Insel der Seligen: Lukian VH II 20." Epea Pteroenta 75: 151-162.

Nietzsche, F. (1870). "Der Florentinische Tractat über Homer und Hesiod, ihr Geschlecht und ihren Wettkampf, 1-2." RM 25: 528-40.

Nietzsche, F. (1871). "Certamen quod dicitur Homeri et Hesiodi. E codice florentino post Henricum Stephanum denuo edidit Fridericus Nietzsche Numburgensis." Acta societatis philologiae Lipsiensis 1: 1-23.

Nietzsche, F. (1873). "Der Florentinische Tractat über Homer und Hesiod, ihr Geschlecht und ihren Wettkampf, 3-5 " RM 28: 211-49.

Nilsson, M. P. (1906). Griechische Feste von religiöser Bedeutung. Leipzig.

Ni-Mheallaigh, K. (2009). "Monumental fallacy: the teleology of origins in Lucian's Verae Historiae." A Lucian for our Times. A. Bartley, ed. Newcastle upon Tyne: 11–28.

Öhler, H. (1913). Paradoxographi Florentini anonymi opusculum de aquis mirabilibus: ad fidem codicum manu scriptorum ed. commentario instructum. Tübingen.

- Olson, S. D. (1998). Aristophanes: Peace. Oxford.
- O'Sullivan, N. (1992). Alcidamas, Aristophanes, and the Beginnings of Greek Stylistic Theory. Stuttgart.
- Parker, V. (1997). Untersuchungen Zum Lelantischen Krieg und Verwandten Problemen der Frühgriechischen Geschichte. Stuttgart.
- Parry, M. (1971). The Making of Homeric Verse: The Collected Papers of Milman Parry, ed. A Parry. Oxford.
- Patzer, A. (1993). "Hesiod als Rhapsode." Ut Poiesis Pictura: Antike Texte in Bildern. N. Holzberg and F. Maier, eds. Bamberg: 83-96.
- Pearson, A. C., Ed. (1891). The Fragments of Zeno and Cleanthes, with Introduction and Explanatory Notes. London.
- Penella, R. J. (2000). The Private Orations of Themistius. Berkeley.
- Pertusi, A. (1951). "Intorno alla tradizione manoscritta degli scolii di Proclo ad Esiodo IV: Proclo e non Proclo." Aevum 25(2): 147-59.
- Pertusi, A., ed. (1955). Scholia Vetera in Hesiodi Opera et Dies. Milan.
- Pfeiffer, R. (1968). History of Classical Scholarship: From the Beginnings to the End of the Hellenistic Age. Oxford.
- Piccolomini, E. (1874). "Due documenti relativi ad acquisti di codici greci, fatti da Giovanni Lascaris per conto di Lorenzo de' Medici ". RFIC 2: 401-23.
- Pinkwart, D. (1965). Das Relief des Archelaos von Priene und die "Musen des Philiskos". Kallmünz.
- Pontani, F. (2005). Eraclito, Questioni Omeriche sulle allegorie di Omero in Merito agli Dèi. Pisa.
- Pordomingo, F. (2010). "Antologías escolares de época helenística." Libri di scuola e pratiche didattiche. Dall'Antichità al Rinascimento. Atti del Convegno Internazionale di Studi, Cassino, 7-10 maggio 2008. L. D. Corso and O. Pecere, eds. Cassino: 37-69.
- Powell, J. U. (1925). Collectanea Alexandrina: reliquiae minores poetarum Graecorum aetatis Ptolemaic, 323-146 A. C.: epicorum, elegiacorum, lyricorum, ethicorum.

Oxford.

Raubitschek, A. E. (1968). "Denkmal und Epigram." L'épigramme grecque, Entretiens sur l'Antiquité Classique 14. Vandoeuvres-Geneva: 1-37.

Renahan, R. (1971). "The Michigan Alcidamas-Papyrus: A problem in methodology." HSPH 75: 85-105.

Renahan, R. (1976). Studies in Greek texts: critical observations to Homer, Plato, Euripides, Aristophanes and other authors. Göttingen.

Rhodes, P. J. (1972). The Athenian Boule. Oxford.

Rhodes, P. J. (1981). A Commentary on the Aristotelian Athenaion Politeia. Oxford.

Richardson, N. (1975). "Homeric professors in the age of the Sophists." PCPS 21: 65-81.

Richardson, N. (1981). "The contest of Homer and Hesiod and Alcidamas' Mouseion." CQ 31: 1-10.

Richardson, N. (1984). Review of Heldmann 1982. CR 34(2): 308-9.

Richardson, N. (1993). The Iliad: A Commentary: Volume 6 books 21-24. Cambridge.

Richardson, N., ed. (2010). Three Homeric Hymns. To Apollo, Hermes, and Aphrodite. Cambridge.

Richter, G. (1965). The Portraits of the Greeks, vol. 1. London.

Rosen, R. M. (1990). "Poetry and Sailing in Hesiod's 'Works and Days.'." Cl Ant 9(1): 99-113.

Rosen, R. M. (1997). "Homer and Hesiod." A New Companion to Homer. I. Morris and B. Powell. Leiden: 463-88.

Rosen, R. M. (2004). "Aristophanes' Frogs and the Contest of Homer and Hesiod." TAPhA 134: 295-322.

Rubinstein, N. (1990). "Il Bruni a Firenze: retorica e politica." Leonardo Bruni cancelliere della Repubblica di Firenze: Convegno di Studi (Firenze, 27-29 ottobre 1987). P. Viti. Florence: 20-8.

Russell, D. A. (1996). Libanius: Imaginary Speeches: a Selection of Declamations Translated with Notes. London.

Russell, D. A. and N. G. Wilson, eds. (1981). Menander Rhetor edited with translation and commentary by D.A. Russell and N. G. Wilson. Oxford.

Rzach, A., ed. (1913). Hesiodi Carmina recensuit Aloisius Rzach. Editio Tertia. Accedit Certamen Quod Dicitur Homeri Et Hesiodi. Leipzig.

Salemi, V. (1951). "Spunti neoplatonici nel commento di Proclo agli Erga kai Hemera" Annali della Facoltà di Lettere dell'Università di Napoli 1: 75-83.

Sauppe, H. (1850). Oratores Attici: Scholia, Fragmenta, Indices. Vol. 2. Zurich.

Scafoglio, M. (2006). "Two Fragments of the Epic Cycle." GRBS 46: 5-11.

Schefold, K. (1997). Die Bildnisse der antiken Dichter, Redner und Denker, 2nd edition. Basel.

Scodel, R. (1980). "Hesiod Redivivus." GRBS 21: 301-20.

Severyns, A., ed. (1938-1963). Recherches sur la Chrestomatie de Proclus. Paris.

Sinclair, T. J. (1932). Hesiod: Works and Days. London.

Skiadas, A. D. (1965). Homer Im Griechischen Epigramm. Athens.

Solmsen, F. (1932). "Drei Rekonstruktionen zur antiken Rhetorik und Poetik. I: Alkidamas." Hermes 67: 133-44.

Solmsen, F. (1940). "Some works of Philostratus the Elder." TAPA 71: 556-72.

Sommerstein, A. H. (1985). The Comedies of Aristophanes: Peace. Warminster.

Sturz, F. G., ed. (1787). Hellanic Lesbii Fragmenta e variis scriptoribus collegit emendavit illustravit et praemissa Commentatione de Hellanici aetate vita et scriptis in universum edidit Fridericus Guilielmus Sturz. Leipzig.

Thompson, S. (1957). Motif-Index of Folk-Literature. Bloomington.

Uden, J. (2010). "The Contest of Homer and Hesiod and the ambitions of Hadrian." JHS 130: 121-35.

Unanua Garmendia, M. Á. (2003). "El catálogo de las naves de la « Iliada » : un problema de cálculo." Helmantica 54: 219-46.

Verdenius, W. J. (1985). A Commentary on Hesiod Works and Days vv. 1-382. Leiden.

Verity, A. (2011). Homer. The Iliad. A New Translation by Anthony Verity. Oxford.

Vinogradov, J. G. (1969). "Cyclic Poetry in Olbia." VDI 3(109): 142-8.

Vinogradov, J. G. and M. Zolotarev (1990). La Chersonèse de la fin de l'archaïsme. Le Pont-Euxin vu par les Grecs. T. Khartchilava and E. Geny. Paris: 85-120.

Vogt, E. (1959). "Die Schrift vom Wettkampf Homers und Hesiods." RhM 102: 193-221.

Vox, O. (1980). "Esiodo fra Beozia e Pieria." Belfagor 35: 321-5.

Weber, L. (1917). "Steinepigramm und Buchepigramm." Hermes 52(4): 536-57.

Welcker, F. G. (1835). Der Epische Cyclus, Oder Die Homerischen Dichter. Vol. 1. Bonn.

West, M. L. (1966). Theogony: edited with prolegomena and commentary by M.L. West. Oxford.

West, M. L. (1967). "The Contest of Homer and Hesiod." CQ 17(2): 433-50.

West, M. L. (1973). Textual Criticism and Editorial Technique: Applicable to Greek and Latin Texts. Stuttgart.

West, M. L. (1975). "Cynaethus' Hymn to Apollo." CQ 25(2): 161-70.

West, M. L. (1978). Hesiod: Works and Days. Oxford.

West, M. L. (1982). Greek Metre. Oxford.

West, M. L. (1983). The Orphic Poems. Oxford.

West, M. L. (1999). "The Invention of Homer." CQ 49(2): 364-82.

West, M. L., ed. (2003). Homeric Hymns. Homeric Apocrypha. Lives of Homer.

Cambridge (MA).

West, M. L., ed. (2003b). Greek Epic Fragments from the Seventh to the Fifth Centuries BC. Cambridge (MA).

Westermann, A. (1839). Paradoxographoi: Scriptores rerum mirabilium graeci. Braunschweig.

Westermann, A. (1843). Mythographoi Scriptores Poeticae Historiae Graeci. Braunschweig.

Westermann, A. (1845). Biographoi: Vitarum Scriptores Graeci Minores. Braunschweig.

Wilamowitz, U. v. (1875). Analecta Euripidea. Berlin.

Wilamowitz, U. v. (1879). "Parerga." Hermes 14: 161-86.

Wilamowitz, U. v., ed. (1916). Vitae Homeri et Hesiodi in usum scholarum. Bonn.

Wilamowitz, U. v. (1916b). Die Ilias und Homer. Berlin.

Wilson, P. (2009). "Thamyris the Tracian: the archetypal wandering poet?" R. Hunter and I. Rutherford (2009). Cambridge: 46-79.

Winiarczyk, M., ed. (1991). Euhemeri Messenii Reliquiae. Stuttgart-Leipzig.

Winter, J. G. (1925). "A New Fragment on the Life of Homer." TAPhA 56: 120-9.

Zeitlin, F. (2001). "Visions and Revisions of Homer in the Second Sophistic." Greek Identity in the Second Sophistic. S. Goldhill. Cambridge: 195-266.